

SQT training starts

by Sue Sweeney

Last week some members of Company A, 4th Battalion got together in the game room for a few hours, but they weren't playing games. They were practicing for some serious business, Skill Qualification Testing.

The soldiers began with SSgt. Michael Rushton's review of how to arm and disarm Claymore and Anti-Tank mines. He explained the procedure and then demonstrated it. Then he asked them to show him what they had learned.

As each soldier completed his assigned task, he let out a small sigh of relief. If he could do it in practice, he could do it correctly for the real test in June. Any soldier who didn't perform well enough, practiced until he could arm and disarm mines like a pro.

"My men take their SQT training seriously. They know the test can affect promotion and even reenlistment opportunities. They study hard. They can learn about their SQT by reading their manuals but the hands-on portion of their training is also very important. It gives them actual experience," said Sgt. Jerry Tavares, Company A, 4th Battalion.

"We have SQT training every other day and we study during our off-time. We read about a task, we see it performed and then we get to practice it ourselves. I think that will help us immensely," said Sp4 Mark Navarre.

The classes are not always held indoors. Sometimes they go to the ranges or in other parts of the company training area. By the time the soldiers take the SQT, they hope to have had a class on every major testable area.

Besides working with mines, the soldiers also practice marksmanship with the M-16A1, first aid, hand-grenade qualification, assembly and disassembly of weapons, and much more.

EASY DOES IT—PFC Eric VonBosse, Company A, 4th Battalion practices his mine abilities during a skills qualification class. Company A has these classes every other day. The practice gives the needed experience to pass the SQT.

W-2 explained block by block

by Sue Sweeney

It's tax time again. Filing an income tax statement can be very difficult, especially if you don't know or understand your W-2 form.

This year's W-2 form was released into the command with January's Leave and Earning Statements.

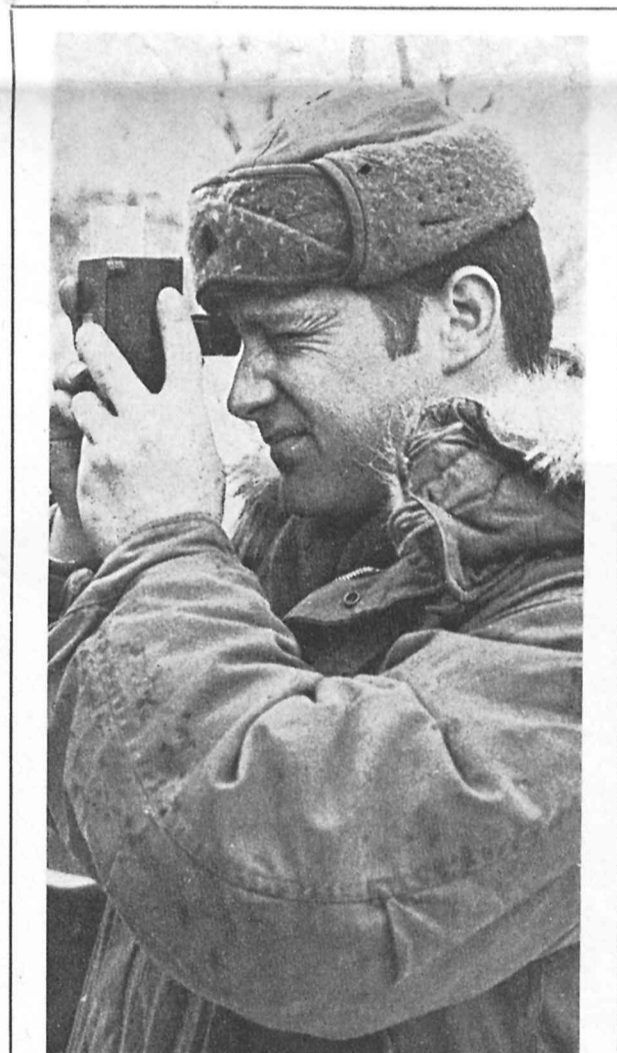

The W-2 form is printed in triplicate. Each copy is designated for a specific purpose. The first is for federal tax and must be included in your federal tax return. The second is for state tax and again it is important that this be enclosed with your tax return. The third copy of your W-2 form is for your personal use and should be kept in your records of at least three years.

On W-2 forms there are many confusing boxes and numbers but with a little time and effort, it can be sorted out. Box 1 has the employers name and address and box 2 gives the amount of Federal Tax withheld. Wages, Tips and Other Compensations, number 3, shows the gross income. The amount of money withheld for Federal Insurance Contributions Acts, more commonly known as Social Security is shown in box 4. Box 5 shows the total taxable FICA wages.

The employees name, is given in box 6. Box 7 gives the employees social security number. Box 8 shows if the employee is covered by a pension plan. Advanced Earned Income Credit is written in box 8a. This is an extra payment added to the regular rebate for employees who meet certain qualifications. To find out if you qualify contact your unit tax representative.

Personnel who don't receive W-2 forms, such as those who get paid in DM's, should substitute the December Leave and Earning Statement or a end of month pay stub in it's place. They should also include an explanation explaining why they are making the substitution.

Keep mildew out let air circulate

The people at Directorate of Engineering and Housing are aware of the problem some occupants in the housing areas are having with the incidents of moldy mildew in their homes.

They would like to address this problem by first saying that several of these homes were visited and in all instances were indeed found to have mold (fungus) in the corners of several rooms.

Some of the occupants were also unaware of what causes moldy mildew and how to prevent it. They were also at a loss on how to combat this intruder once it is detected.

Many people believe that in order to deal with the room temperatures imposed by the Energy Conservation Program in this command, they may run hot water in the shower to heat (and steam) up the house, or they boil beans and pudding on the stove all day. Then, to hold the heat (and steam) in the room they weatherstrip the windows with plastic sheeting. This is not the way to deal with the problem.

Mold is ever present in the air and flourishes on anything that can provide the simple nutrients required. It grows in places that are poorly ventilated and lighted.

Ex-captives deserve respect

by Charles A. Krohn

What lessons, if any, can soldiers draw from release of the Americans held hostage in Iran?

For one thing, we have learned that it is no holiday to be held hostage. Regardless of how kind or brutal the treatment may be, a hostage is still deprived of freedom. Furthermore; the hostage is a victim, and the behavior of terrorists who take hostage is predictably unpredictable.

As far as Iran is concerned, we haven't heard any reports that the hostage were treated with special kindness. Just the reverse. The stories we read about having to "play" Russian Roulette or having to spend months in solitary confinement are enough to make your blood curdle.

When the final story is written, we may find even more reason to be alarmed and indignant.

It is doubtful that we will find any reason to be grateful for how are our fellow citizens were treated in Iran. Still, they all got out alive and for that we can be thankful.

Soldiers who have been taken prisoner by our adversaries rarely emerge from captivity with glowing reports of their captors' generosity. This is especially true for American prisoners of war in Southeast Asia. Too many tales have been written about their treatment in North Vietnam to make us doubt the physical and mental tortures inflicted methodically upon them. Those fortunate enough to survive found their endurance and will power pushed to the outer limits.

No one can be proud of being a POW or of being held hostage. There is no reason to be ashamed either. Yet, there still is a lesson to be learned: POW's and hostages who endure captivity with their honor intact provide quite inspiration for the rest of us who can only share their agony from afar.

For that they deserve our affection, admiration and respect. (ARNEWS)

Reagan was once a private in Army

As a member of the U. S. Army, you have something in common with President Ronald W. Reagan.

He began military life in 1937 as a private in Troop B, 3220th Cavalry, U.S. Army Reserve. On June 18th He was appointed a second lieutenant in the cavalry reserve.

Reagan was called to active duty on April 19, 1942. Less than two months later the Tampico, Ill. native was transferred to the Army Air Corps. He was promoted to captain July 22, 1943.

The new Commander in Chief was released from active duty on December 19, 1945. His job assignments while on active duty ranged from squadron commander to personnel staff officer to a tour as post adjutant with motion picture units in Culver City, Calif. (ARNEWS)

"... So then I laid some Bicentennial stuff on him — I says, "Sir, gimme liberty or give me death!"

He's an electronics 'sore thumb'

by Sam Williams

Sometimes anonymity is a great thing to have. It allows you to escape many of the rigors of a very demanding world in the most unnoticed ways.

From time to time—and for whatever our reasons may be—we all have either wished for or used anonymity as a means of disclaiming some of our deeds. However, Berlin's Sgt. Clarence Fenner, of Combat Support Battalion, isn't so lucky. Far from remaining anonymous, you just might say Fenner and his work stand out like a sore thumb since he serves as a one man electronics repair unit each time his battalion trains in the field.

Modest and somewhat less than talkative in nature the 26-year-old Philadelphia, Pa. native seems to feel right at home when surrounded by colored wirings, schematic diagrams, a various assortment of weird looking tools and electronic gear that looks more like out-of-season Christmas decorations with its multi-colored blinking lights.

"I guess it's really all weird," Fenner began explaining when asked how did he initially enter the electronics field. "Prior to joining the Army I had no interest in nor knowledge of electronics. But when I decided to enter the Army I said this was the field I wanted to try. And I did. With nothing more as an incentive than the fact that I simply wanted to try the communications field."

In 1975 Fenner entered the Army, undergoing basic training at Fort Dix, N.J. Upon completing his 31V (communications) basic AIT training, the young radio repairman was assigned to the 2nd Infantry Division (Mechanized) in Korea.

"Korea wasn't bad," Fenner reflects. "I stayed there for one year serving as a basic radio man. After my year ended I was reassigned to duty at the 12th Aviation Company, Fort Rucker, Ala." And according to Fenner it was during this time that his true "wizardry" in electronics began to surface.

"They assigned me to a civilian electronics maintenance shop there," he recalls. "And for the next three years I underwent hour after hour of in depth and extensive electronic training every day. Each day they simply drilled me on the maintenance of AM/FM radio, televisions, cassettes, recorders, telephone circuitry, aviation-type radios and just about anything else you can think of that deals with electronics."

One-man team

Since that time Fenner's talents have blossomed into a resourceful well for the Army. Not only does he replace an entire electronics repair unit in the field (and in the Brigade as well) but he also supervises and instructs a six-week electronics repair course for various communications MOSs in the command. The course is called Advance Radio Repair but includes several other aspects of electronics repair also. Additionally Fenner is also a member of the IG team, pre and post inspections team and is the lone inspector of all electronic equipment in the command.

Presently a junior majoring in criminal justice, Fenner says he plans to apply for a commission as a warrant officer in his present field. When asked what he thinks his chances of making warrant actually are, Fenner said, "Oh, I honestly believe I'll make it. That's how much confidence I have in myself."

ALONE AT WORK — Sgt. Clarence Fenner, the lone electronics technician for Combat Support Battalion, prepares one of the broken radios for his unit. Fenner puts in approximately 15-17 hours each day making repairs that would otherwise require a team of technicians to do.

4th Battalion troops focus on education

Soldiers find EMT lifesavers

Several members of the 4th Battalion are using the battalion's education block to learn life-saving skills. They are enrolled in the Emergency Medical Technician Course being held at the Berlin Hospital.

In the past, people working aboard ambulances were considered little more than "body pushers". Many accident victims died at the scene or while being transported because no one had the medical training to treat life-threatening injuries or severe sicknesses. That's not true today with trained EMTs.

Soldiers from 4th Battalion are learning a wide variety of life-saving steps, including how to stop simple bleeding, extracting victims from wrecked autos, sophisticated methods of determining the condition of a person by monitoring vital signs, and cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

All are steps which could mean the difference between life and death to their patients.

Every student spends a minimum of 10 hours in the hospital's emergency room during off duty hours to complete the requirements of the class. They also get hands-on experience while working with the hospital staff. They feel it's good training.

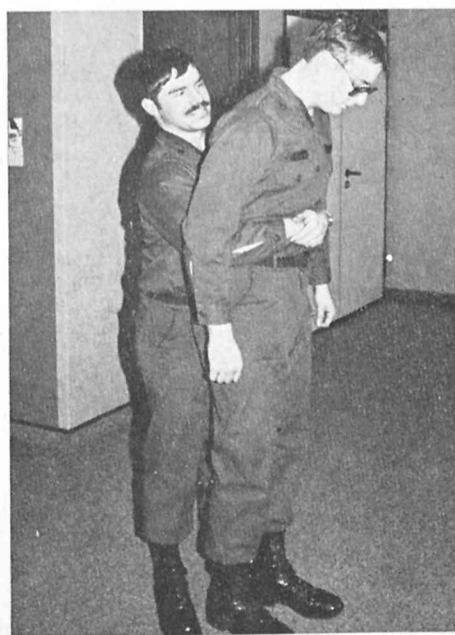

Infantry squad leader SSgt. Frederick M. Strange, Company B enrolled in the class because he feels "every soldier needs some type of medical training."

PFC Edward Ortiz, medic with Headquarters and Headquarters Company had discovered that EMT is a refresher of prior medical school training he received as well as covering subjects he was not taught.

Capt. Sylvia Pruitt, a registered nurse and medical coordinator for the class, adds, "The course that the City College of Chicago offers is an excellent basic EMT Course. It teaches students how to treat and transport the sick and wounded without further injuries or complications which is important when medical personnel are not around, especially in combat zones." Pruitt also stated that the school keeps up with all the changes in the medical profession and when improvements are made or something is deleted, they make the necessary changes in the curriculum.

At the end of the course those who pass the school's test will be given the opportunity to take the National Registry Test. It is a little harder than the regular school test, but it gives the students a better chance to find a good paying job with an ambulance company or a rescue squad.

HUG OF LIFE — Sp4 Gary Schumacher practices applying the Heimlich maneuver on PFC Dave Helenick. Both are members of 4th Battalion and are attending the EMT course offered during the battalion's education cycle.

Decon team undergoes training

by Sam Williams

Did you know that between 10-25 million deaths each year — or about 30,000-70,000 each day — come about as a result of disease caused by unclean and or inadequate water supplies?

Did you know that, according to the latest World Health Organization reports, 80 percent of all sickness in the world is attributable to inadequate water or sanitation?

And, did you know that recent Health Organization reports also indicate that to obtain clean water for all by the turn of the decade (1990) it would cost in excess of $600 billion, or $60 billion every year throughout 1989.

Of course all of these statistics mean nothing at all to most of us. But to a small group of 42nd Engineers who recently completed a month long training exercise in Bergen-Horne, it is statistics such as these that make their job all the more meaningful.

The tiny crew is known quite simply as the water purification team. The four-man squad, guided by 1st Lt. Charlie Hart, 42nd Engineer, executive officer, is presently training 22 other engineers in the intricate art of water purification.

Of course the team's mission is not one of an international significance, but when placed on a local scale of priorities Hart's team function is a thoroughly vital one because during a water supply crisis he and his squad must be capable of purifying enough water for all the soldiers in the brigade without any additional help from other sources, Hart explained.

According to Hart the system draws unpurified water from sources such as rivers and streams. The water flows into the main decontamination devices. There it undergoes changes, separating the contaminants from the newly-purified water. The contaminants are then released from the decon device and re-enter the main body of water, flowing downstream.

Following this, additional procedures and tests are run on the water to check for the degree of purification. Should the water pass the stringent tests administered by Sgt. William Crawford, section chief, he drinks the first sample. "He'll never ask anyone to drink water he hasn't sampled first," Hart said.

Hart also pointed out that the water-purification system puts out 1500 gallons per hour.

Of course, as may well be expected, all is not as simple as it sounds.

"It is especially difficult for the team in cold weather," Hart explained. "Not so much on the guys but on the equipment. This machine can run only 10 hours then it must be shut off for a two-hour rest.

"It's during those two hours that the pipes and hoses freeze up, making it impossible to take in more water for further purification. We have to keep the water circulating constantly or everything turns into one big block of ice causing the main machine to overheat."

"There's no special way of reopening or unthawing the pipes," explained Hart. "It doesn't matter how you warm them (the pipes) or how hard you beat them in an attempt to crush the ice just as long as you get the water flowing again."

Hart's lone advice to remedying this situation is very simply "Feel free to use whatever method your imagination provides you with as long as it works."

Though this piece of equipment is new to Berlin and the engineers (it arrived just last year) and though Hart does confess to encountering some minor flare ups from time to time due to inexperience operating the machine in the wintry sub-freezing temperatures; who knows? With enough of these purification systems and teams at work for us we just might have a much brighter outlook for 1990.

New armor officer receives full field welcome

by Sam Williams

Surprise! Surprise! That's exactly what 2nd Lt. John Turner received upon his recent arrival in the Berlin Brigade.

Turner, a 22-year-old Arlington, Va. native and West Point graduate, was officially welcomed into the brigade just three days prior to joining the rest of the members of his new unit, Company F, 40th Armor, on a month long field problem in Bergen-Horne.

"Everything was really a blur for me that first day," Turner recalled. "I was running around in-processing and picking up gear at high speed all that day." With a coy smile growing at the corners of his mouth the youthful looking lieutenant cheerfully added, "With the jet lag that hit me that day you can image just how much fun all of this turned out to be."

As if that weren't reception enough for any new member, Turner revealed that he later discovered there would be no housing available for him before his field duty as he had previously thought there would be. As a result he ended having to move everything back out of the quarters area before leaving for the field.

Nonetheless, Turner, who has also completed armor and ranger schools, said the immediate field duty situation has all worked out for the best as far as he's concerned.

"The training's been pretty hot and heavy so far. We've been busy right from the day we arrived here. But I'm glad it happened this way," Turner said. "This is probably the best way to get to know your men. Back in garrison everyone's running around pulling details and doing other things and it's hard to learn everybody and their potential. But here in the field you get to see who's who and what they can do."

A runner by hobby, Turner said he chose to enter the ranger field because "it pushes you to the limits while providing you with the best of good training and leadership schools." As far as his reasons for choosing armor go, Turner simply explained that he "liked the idea of being able to move with a lot of fire power. I think that's pretty impressive."

"I must admit though," he concluded, "I would have had the time of my life had I not had a good sponsor. 1st Lt. (John) Maynard did a great job for me and because of that this encounter wasn't anything like it could have been without proper sponsorship."

"More than anything else," said the new leader of Company F's first platoon, "I'm looking forward to enjoying the city of Berlin. I heard so many good things about the place before arriving here I'd just like a chance to see some of them for myself."

Field training proves helpful for mechanics

by Sam Williams

"They break down and we fix'em up again," was the way SSgt. James Kennedy, 40th Armor, described the mission of his 17-member maintenance crew while accompanying Combat Support Battalion on their latest field exercise at Bergen Horne.

According to the motor sergeant his crew has only had to pull minor repairs thus far during the field training exercise. Kennedy readily admits this is so only because of the extremely good work he and his crew did on the vehicles before leaving Berlin.

"It's always very helpful to get out here and to learn what and how to do for yourself," said Kennedy. "It teaches them (mechanics) not to become dependent on the third echelon people so much."

Echelons — first, second and third — are the levels of difficulty associated with each task, Kennedy explained. Level one consists of the basic things the driver can do himself such as checking the oil level, tire pressure, battery, head and tail lights and other such tasks.

Level two, a more technical one according to the sergeant, consists of such maintenance as tune-ups and repairing and rebuilding certain parts of the vehicles. And level three, the most advanced one, Kennedy summarized, is composed of even more technically difficult repairs which are usually made by civilians working in the motor shops in the brigade.

"Overall, though, the training here has been quite good for us. It has given all the mechanics here the opportunity to do very valuable cross training. We have had wheel vehicle mechanics pulling maintenance on other than wheel vehicles. We have had track vehicles mechanics working on other than track vehicles, and on and on," Kennedy said.

Kennedy says there are also at least two more advantages gained from the field training exercise. "First," he said, "it helps the section sergeants get their priorities, purpose and management in perspective. They learn who's good at doing what jobs, which vehicle should receive priority and why." In addition he also explained that "after making a repair the mechanics can take the vehicle out and put through a hard driving test. Should the vehicle stand up to this test the mechanics knows his job is a sound one. In Berlin we don't have this option."

PFC Philip Long, a track mechanic in the motor pool had the following to say when asked his views on the field exercise thus far:

"I feel I've gained very valuable training since I've been here. I feel more into it (his work) now because of the conditions under which I'm working."

At the time of his comments the track mechanic was pulling maintenance on a jeep generator, but added he'd also cross trained on wheel vehicles as well since arriving in the field.

"In the field," he continued, "the vehicles are used more often so eventually everyone gets a chance to perform some cross-training maintenance, even if you've never done it before."

According to Sgt. Victor Johnson, a wheel vehicle mechanic, who says he has cross trained in tracks and other pieces of equipment not in his MOS (such as track turrets and communications) this field exercise has been 100 percent helpful to him and others he knows. As he puts it, "Should war break out we won't have any third echelon civilians to depend on so the training we receive here makes us more valuable to ourselves and our missions. Besides the main thing is to become a good all around mechanic and to be able to do several other jobs equally as well. And that's exactly what we're learning to do here."

JUST TUNNING HER UP — Sgt. Victor Johnson (r) works with the motor of one of the vehicles in the shop during the recent field exercise in Bergen-Horne, Johnson says the basic idea of the whole training exercise is to produce as many well-rounded mechanics as possible.

Norman yearns for MSAD fun

Appalled readers throughout the divided city have flooded the MSAD switchboard with requests for information on the retirement of Norman, the fabled chief correspondent of MSAD. Boiled down to one central question, their concern centers of one issue: Will he ever write anything again about MSAD's recreational offerings?

For this week at least, we can all breathe a fractional sigh of relief: Norman, winging his way across the world to his next assignment in Los Angeles, has written his thoughts in a long and thoughtful letter. MSAD herewith repeats the mis- sive:

I doubt that even the sunny shores of the West Coast will be able to fulfill me in recreational terms as much as MSAD managed to in Berlin. I think of the upcoming events staged by my former employers and think wistfully of the chance for enjoyment they represent.

Theater entertainment

Among these events, tonight's comedy production of the great Neil Simon Hit, "Plaza Suite", remains uppermost in my mind. Starring students of the Berlin American High School, that production happens tonight through Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in the Andrews Music and Theater Center. It's free, it's for adults, and it will give its patrons two laughs a minute at least. Call 3550.

If you are interested in being an extra in the dramatic play "Inherit the Wind," give Jim a call at 3550. He needs you and you will enjoy easy-going participation in the theater experience. Call the same number if you want to take part in a new choir being formed at the Music Center (voices are needed from soprano to bass).

Craft and tours

Winging my way across the ocean, I think too of MSAD's new craft courses. Watercolor painting starts Thursday, black-and-white film processing (with special effects) begins Monday and color processing on Feb. 7 (color printing on Feb. 14), while color slide processing, picture-taking-without-film-or-camera and other courses start soon afterwards. Call 3484 for info on the film courses and 3180 about watercolors.

As if that were not enough, MSAD also offers separate courses for men and women on basic auto care and tune-ups. The classes start in early February, and info is available at 3349. Then again, woodworkers will rejoice at a power-tool orientations planned at the Andrews Woodshop several times next month, details of which are to be found at 3544. The Andrews Ceramics Shop also offers orientation courses several times in February, with the first one happening Feb. 5. Call 3534 for ideas.

International Green Week brings food and flowers from many lands to Berlin, and you can see it all on tomorrow with ITT. On Sunday visit the Philharmonic Hall, or see several great museums in East Berlin starting Feb. 7. In a special program to get you through the winter in a state of happiness, ITT will take you to Paris from Feb. 12 to 17, to Munich's Fasching parties on Feb. 25, to skiing in Garmisch starting March 11, and to Switzerland March 19. Space (and the shakiness of this airplane) permit me to write no other details, so call ITT at 6523 for more ideas.

Rec centers

At the Andrews Hi Lite, next month's schedule includes a beginners' karate course starting Monday (call 3554 for sign-up). A beginning bridge workshop begins Tuesday, and auditions for the Hi Lite fashion show take place on Feb. 7 at 2 p.m. (the fashion show itself occurs in March). The Hi Lite needs people of all ages for the show, so give them a ring. Next month's steak night feeds you on Feb. 19, but sign up for it by Feb. 16: it is a great treat for the whole family, especially since the entire meal costs only two dollars.

At McNair, the All American gives you the music of Led Zeppelin on Feb. 13 starting at 7.30 p.m. A Valentine's Hearts Tourney entertains card players on Feb. 14 at 1 p.m., and a special Washington's Birthday celebration grants you a whole day's diversion starting at 1 p.m. At that time, the All American rolls the film "Patton," after which you can dine at a steak bar-b-que starting at 3 p.m. (but sign up in person for the food by Feb. 12).

MSAD libraries open pages to fun, learning

During February, the MSAD library system honors Black History Month with books, records and cassettes illustrating Afro-American contributions to American culture. In "A Poet and His Camera," Gordon Parks combines his world-famous color photography with moving poetry. Coretta King remembers a great leader in "My Life with Martin Luther King, Jr." Oscar-winner Sidney Poitier ("This Life") and musical greats Duke Ellington ("Music is My Mistress") and Ray Charles ("Brother Ray") describe their life stories of struggle and success.

For anyone who has not yet read "Roots," this is the month to check out a copy and read the tragic but triumphant Odyssey of one black family in America and Africa.

Speaking of "Roots," do you want to trace your family tree? If so, then do not miss Dr. Todd Stong's introduction to genealogical research on Feb. 10 at 7 p.m. in the Main Library. Stong will present an overview of how and where to find your roots in American sources, with a touch on English and German research. Call 6559 to reserve a seat. At forthcoming lectures, Stong will offer detailed, practical instructions on tracing your tree.

In another special program, the libraries will have a valentine for each patron they see on Valentine's Day. Keep watching for other special events, programs and contests all year long, as Berlin joins with other USAREUR libraries to make 1981 a "Love Your Library" year.

To help get the year under way, the Main Library shows video programs every Thursday at 7 p.m., with Saturday re-runs at 4 p.m. In February, you will be able to see all these:

Feb. 5 and 7: Men of Bronze (the 15th Infantry in World War I),

Feb. 12 and 14: Inside the Golden Gate (San Francisco Bay),

Feb. 19 and 21: Still Waters (the life of the pond),

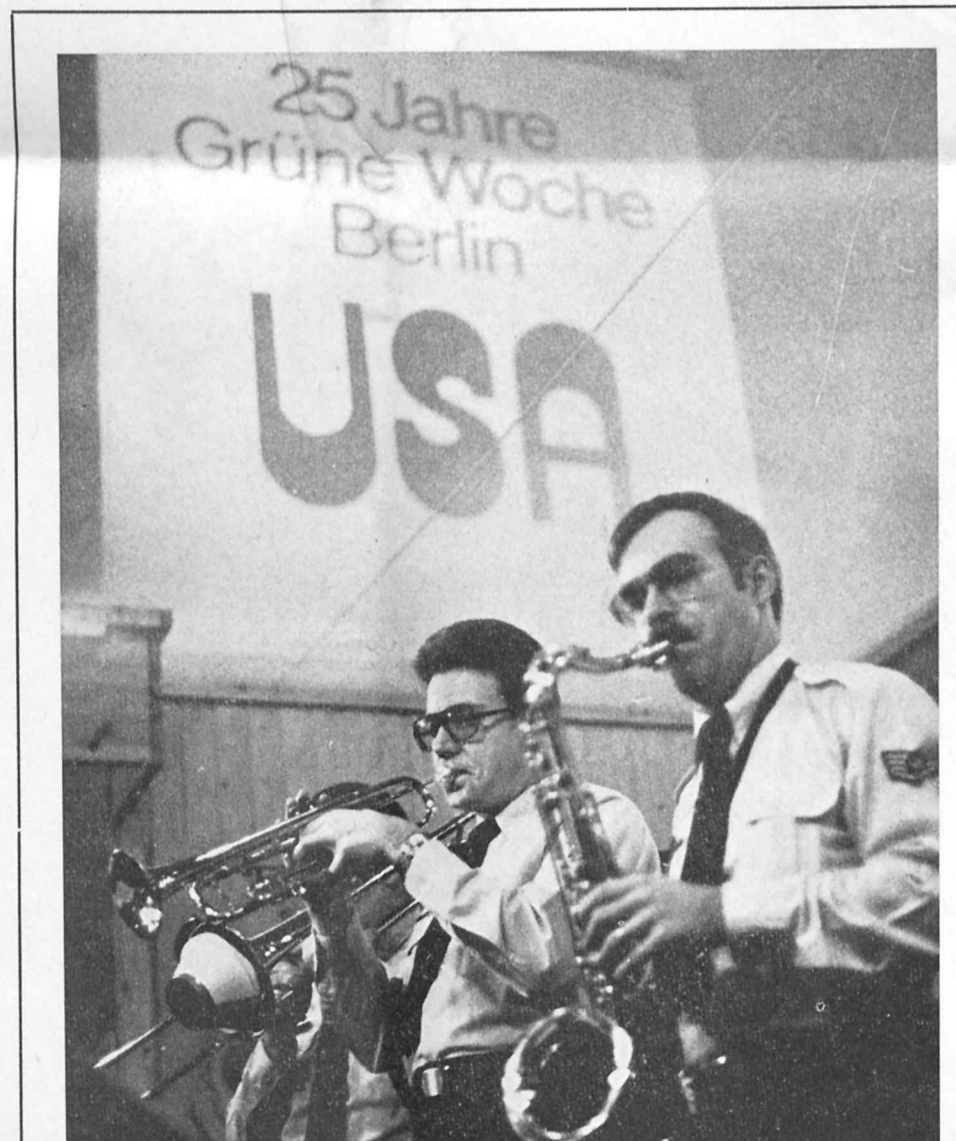

Feb. 26 and 28: Kodiak Island (Alaska).

If these hours do not fit your schedule, call 6559 to arrange for a special showing.

In addition, the libraries give you the chance to read these top novels from the New York Times bestseller list: The Covenant, by James Michener; The Key to Rebecca, by Ken Follett; Firestarter, by Stephen King; Loon Lake, by E. L. Doctorow; Unfinished Tales, by J. R. R. Tolkien; Answer as a Man, by Taylor Caldwell; The Fifth Horseman, by Larry Collins; Come Pour the Wine, by Cynthia Freeman.

Call 6559 about these books or go by any MSAD library and put your name on the reserve list.

Yet another service of the MSAD libraries will help you solve problems you may encounter in writing term papers and other reports. If you are having a hard time finding the right subject, getting to the facts you need in books and magazines, or in using proper forms of footnotes and bibliography, ask your librarians for help: They are there to assist you in getting that "A" (and they will even supply the typewriter).

A MUSICAL AFFAIR — Members of the seven-membered Friends Octet toot their horns for passers by during this year's Green Week. The extravaganza comes to an end Sunday so interested persons are encouraged to hurry out. Daily hours are 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.. Adult admission fee is DM 7 while children under 14 pay just DM 2. (Photo by Susan Geller)

3rd Battalion fights for trophy

3rd Battalion's battle of the boxers took place in the Sports Center gym, Saturday evening.

The 16 fights lasting approximately three hours, showed the crowd some previously hidden talent.

The highlight fight of the evening was between Dana J. Allen from Company B and Daniel Drones from Combat Support Company. Drones won this fight by tiring his opponent with body punches, and many left hooks and jabs.

The winning company was Company B and the most valuable fighter was Dana Allen. Other winners included Ernest Gonzalez from Company A, Don L. Sparkman from Combat Support Company, Maurice Abron from Company C, Michael Anderson from Company B, Gary D. Jarmon from Company A, Steve Carrillo from Company A, Clinton Graves, a member of the Berlin Brigade boxing team from Company A, Allen Fotusky from Company B, Robert Brown from Company B, John M. Hilligas from Company C, Lee Richardson from Combat Support Company, Kenneth Alvin for Company B and Gary Johnson from the same company, Jerry Hollman from Company C and James Newton from Combat Support Company. Also Roderick Jackson from Company B, and Ricardo Bonilla from Company C, both went uncontested.

Wrestlers plan to take first at USAREUR meet

The nine members of the Berlin Brigade wrestling team traveled to Schweinfurt on Monday for the USAREUR tournament.

This tournament not only pits the top wrestlers in Europe against each other, but also plays a major role in determining which wrestlers will be selected to participate in the All-Army trials.

Last year three Berlin men, Ron Williams from Company B, 3rd Battalion, Al Hrcncir and Geno Clemons both from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Berlin Brigade won their USAREUR matches and went to the All-Army competition. Clemons has made the All-Army team for the past three years.

"Even though this year's brigade team is small, I feel that we have a good chance of winning at five of our matches this year," said Hrcncir, the coach. "Our whole season is geared towards this meet and the All-Army trials. We have trained hard and have some exceptional wrestlers from last year as well as some first year wrestlers who have improved greatly this past season. The team's composite record for the season is now 156-37. Representing Berlin Brigade will be:

Name	Unit	Weight Class	Record	Titles

Personnel who were not in the U. S. on April 15 must submit their income tax form no later than June 15. However if on April 15, you owe taxes, you will be charged interest for the extra month. When you file in June you must also add a statement explaining to the Internal Revenue Service that you were present in a foreign country on April 15.

If you have any other major questions concerning your income tax statement, contact your unit tax representative.

Personnel who lose their W-2 form should submit a pay inquiry through their Personnel Action Center to the Finance Office. This pay inquiry will then be sent to the Finance Center located at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. — Six to eight weeks later, a new W-2 form will be sent.

An extra important tip to remember is the earlier you submit your income tax return, the earlier the refund should be returned.

The amount of state income tax withheld is entered in box 9. This is not always applicable as some states do not withhold state tax for service members. Box 10 again shows the total amount earned and box 11 gives the employees state of record. Boxes 12-4 are not applicable.

Chapel plans special seminars

A Marriage Enrichment Seminar and programs for dependent wives and parents and teens make up the new community-oriented programs being sponsored by the Berlin chaplains. All three seminars start next week.

The Marriage Enrichment Seminar for married couples and singles planning marriage will be held Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Both morning and evening sessions are planned. Morning sessions run from 9 to 11:30 a.m. with duplicate evening sessions being held from 7 to 9:30 p.m. Child care will be provided.

Learning to deal with living in a foreign country, being a woman and enjoying it, how to be free and married, and separation from family roots are the major topics scheduled for discussion during the Dependent Wives Seminar. The one-day seminar will be held Thursday. A morning session runs from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and evening session from 7 to 9:30 p.m. Child care will be provided.

Parents and teens will learn to increase communications and trust, lessen harassment and misunderstanding, and aid in mutual goal-setting during the Parents and Teens Seminar set for Feb. 8. The discussions run from 4 to 8 p.m. with a covered dish dinner to be held at 7:30 p.m. Child care to age ten will be provided.

Each of the seminars will be held at the American Community Chapel on Huettenweg. All are led by Lucile Johnson.

Johnson, wife of Col. (Ret.) Harold O. Johnson, is a sociologist with special expertise in marriage and family relations. She is presently with Brigham Young University as a member of the Division of Continuing Education faculty. In this capacity she has lectured for the university throughout the United States and Canada.

In June 1979, at the invitation of the U. S. Army Chaplain, she expanded the range of her seminars by presenting family enrichment seminars at major Army and Air Force installations across Germany and Italy. They have further been extended to Spain, Belgium, Turkey, Greece, Bangkok and England.

Johnson also served the military community by acting as USAREUR's Advisor for Family Affairs for Commander in Chief's Gen. James Polk and Gen. Michael Davison.

Described in print as the most outstanding resource person in her field, Johnson is sure to lead interesting and informative seminars from which all who attend will benefit.

GM '81 autos may enter U.S.

General Motors 1981 automobiles equipped with emission control systems will now be allowed to re-enter the U. S. after use overseas, say Army and Air Force Exchange Service officials.

It was originally thought the use of leaded gas in these models would damage the computer command emission control system which would be costly to replace. According to GM, these fears have been eliminated. The cars will meet environmental protection agency standards for return to the continental U. S.

However, GM recommends the removal of the catalytic converter or its pellets from a 1981 model vehicle before using the leaded gas most often available overseas. Leaded gas will cause damage to the converter which is part of the emission control system. Upon return to the U. S., the converter or pellets, along with a new exhaust oxygen sensor must be re-installed. The cost will be about $50, GM officials have informed AAFES.

The warranty provisions will not be affected in any way by the use of leaded fuel overseas, GM further explained.

Certain 1981 cars continue to be available for use with unleaded gas only. These are the early 1981 Ford and Mercury models with the 2.3, 4.2 or 5.0 liter engines, the Lincoln with the 5.8 liter engine, the Chrysler Imperial and AMC models equipped with California emission controls.

Further information can be obtained from local automobile sales representatives, AAFES officials comment. (ARNEWS)

Mold

To avoid mold that causes mildew we must first get rid of the substance that nourishes it, humidity. Cross ventilate your home, especially now when the air is colder outside than inside.

Cold air holds less moisture than warm air, and by cross ventilating two or three times a day, or leaving a window cracked open just the tiniest bit, the moist humid air will be absorbed and carried outdoors.

Room temperature is not the root of the problem. Here are a few everyday examples that will help you understand that the room temperature, even when lowered to 65 degrees has nothing whatever to do with the growth of mildew as many people may believe.

Let's say you took that early morning shower, and you closed the window lest you catch cold. Then you dry off, making that nice fluffy towel all wet, as is the bath mat, the window, the walls and the mirror are steamed up, the tiles are wet and the shower curtain is bunched aside.

You leave the bathroom amid a cloud of steam that practically follows you into the bedroom where you get dressed. Then it's off to work and the bathroom just sits there left to its own devices. The window is closed, and you made sure the bathroom door was closed when you left. When you get home eight hours or so later, enough time will have passed for the first hints of moldy mildew to begin. Within 24 hours, if left unchecked, you will have the first black spots of ugly stuff in the folds of the shower curtain, in the tile grout and elsewhere.

Now what do you do? Attack immediately!! Open the window wide to dry the area, then scrub the affected area with a solution of 1/3 cup of household detergent, 1/2 cup of bleach and four cups of warm water, rinse and wipe dry. When you find mold on painted surfaces, let's say your living room, you allow this solution to soak in, then you scrub and rinse and wipe dry.

If there remains a spot on the wall, come to the Self-Help-Issue-Point on the DEH Compound with your SHIP certificate of proficiency for some paint, brushes, etc. Once you have your place nice and clean again, check often, and be sure to air daily.

Don't worry, your aren't going to freeze, but the droplets that carry the beginnings of mold will be carried outdoors and no longer bug you.

Well, you'll say to yourself, and then to compensate for the loss of heat through the open windows, the shutters must be rolled down and the drapes closed. No, wrong again.

The molds that grow into mildew hate daylight! You remember that your scoutleader taught you that the way to find north is to look for the moss on trees. The side it grows on points north, less sunlight hits the tree there.

THIS IS WRONG — Someone put plastic on their window in the Berlin Brigade housing area. Moisture collected between the window and the plastic. The wind blew the plastic against the window and it froze there. Since air can not get through the window the mildew problem in this apartment will be aggravated. (Photo by Sandy Redger)

Temperatures, whether cold, tepid or hot has nothing to do with the growth of mold.

It grows where there is no air circulation, where there is no light and where the merest hint of the beginning of mold is allowed to spread — like mushrooms! That's all it is, fungi!!!

The window frames in some quarters are cold and water runs down off them constantly. What can be done? Nothing much, except mopping up the wetness, dry the windows and wipe up the windows sills, and do that as often as is necessary during this season. If mold starts growing remove it with the solution described earlier.

DEH personnel recognize this as one of the significant problems in some areas, where there are aluminum frames and the houses are older.

The DEH is looking for a solution, hopefully one will be forthcoming soon. If you have a solution use the Suggestion Program through your unit.

Residents to leave Schlangenbader

Some Schlangenbader residents may be moving soon.

A decision has been made by the command to release the north Schlangenbader building as of June 30. Military personnel now living in this building who DEROS later than June 30 will be re-assigned to other permanent or temporary quarters. The moves will be made at government expense.

The re-assignment policy for the north building residents is now effect. It states that:

- Military personnel living in one, two and three bedroom quarters will be placed on the appropriate waiting list for quarters other than Schlangenbader.

- Ineligible personnel living permanently in temporary quarters will be placed on the waiting list for temporary quarters in the south Schlangenbader building.

- Soldiers living in Single Enlisted Bachelor Quarters will be placed on the appropriate waiting list for SEBQs in the south Schlangenbader building or other housing areas as vacancies dictate.

All re-assignments will be accomplished by June 30.
