

Reimbursement now for picking up, taking car to port

There's good news for service members who are Bremerhaven-bound to pick up their cars or take them to port.

According to CWO 2 William J. Hughes, chief, AG Personnel Actions Branch, personnel being reassigned to or from an overseas command are entitled to reimbursement for one-way transportation when taking a car to the appropriate vehicle port and when picking up a car.

This policy applies to new arrivals who must pick up their cars in Bremerhaven. It also applies to Berlin service members who take their cars to Bremerhaven for shipment. The benefit is available, too, when departing personnel pick up their cars at the stateside port.

Service members are authorized 16 cents per mile reimbursement ($42.72 to or from Bremerhaven). Reimbursement for additional expenses, such as meals or lodging, is not authorized. The entitlement applies only to one-way travel with car when delivering it and picking it up.

To receive this benefit, service members must have PCS orders. They also must have separate temporary duty (TDY) orders—DD Form 1610. Unit PAC's can prepare the TDY orders. PSNCO's can provide information on procedures for reimbursement once service members have picked up their cars in the U.S.

This policy is retroactive. Personnel who delivered or picked up a car on or after Oct. 30, 1981, may be entitled to reimbursement.

For more information or assistance, service members should contact their PSNCO or unit PAC.

2nd Battalion practices MEDEVAC

Platoon trains for emergencies

While most of the city was sleeping, a call was received by the duty NCO at the 2nd Battalion aid station requesting emergency medical assistance. The call came in at 2:30 a.m. and was the beginning of a training exercise which would test and evaluate everyone in the section by the time it finished.

The exercise, in planning stages for three weeks, was conceived by CWO 2 Gerold L. Wilson, battalion medical officer; SSgt. Lawrence Ellis, NCOIC of the medical platoon; and SSgt. Raymond J. Ashmore, evacuation sergeant. Wilson said, "This was a brand new type of training for the 2nd Battalion medical platoon, and not a part of our regular training. This exercise enabled us to train and evaluate all of the platoon's sections working together as a team. Normally, we only do checks on individual sections doing a particular job as part of other training."

Let rumors stay on 'grapevine'

by Linda Grus

If you heard it on the grapevine, that's where it should stay.

Don't listen to rumors and don't spread gossip!

Webster defines rumors as unconfirmed reports, stories, etc., in general circulation. The key here is unconfirmed.

Because rumors are unconfirmed, they shouldn't be spread by anyone—anytime. But, they are.

In the military, gossip seems to be more common; maybe because of the competition. There's always some soldier who thinks he has to say something bad about a fellow worker to make him or herself look better.

Malicious gossip hurts working relationships because it causes mistrust among co-workers.

Malicious gossip can ruin a person's reputation. Anyone who's heard the rumor will always remember what was said.

It can ruin a person's career, because it will affect a soldier's attitude and it might cause his commander and supervisors to lose faith in him.

For the same reason that gossip ruins a person's career, gossipers will suffer also because of the rumors they spread. Commanders have alternatives in dealing with gossipers, too.

They can verbally reprimand soldiers, give them counseling statements, or they can have a Letter of Reprimand placed in their personal files.

It's almost impossible to stop rumors, but, if you're aware that one's starting, you can be kept out of it; mainly, by not listening to it and not repeating what you heard.

Gossip can only hurt people and ruin good working relationships. Don't be a gossiper!

Service member comments on equality issue

Editor:

I am writing in response to the "family member's" plea that she not be treated as an equal on the job.

It really sounds to me like she has a great supervisor and she's just not bright enough to realize it. His understanding that pregnancy can have its difficulties showed a good deal of caring and concern for her health and that of her unborn child. I doubt that he was trying to take away from her equality by letting her have a few hours off when she was sick. More likely he was truly understanding of what she was going through.

Maybe the men who moved her desk were trying to be gentlemen. Or, depending on her size and that of the desk, they may have realized she was physically unable to. Not being able to move a desk will hardly detract from a person's equality on the job.

The Christmas party at her husband's unit ... Well, again, maybe her boss is the understanding type and realized the importance of family and unit get-togethers. Perhaps he realized that many soldiers don't get to spend a great deal of time with their families and he wanted to give her and her husband the opportunity to do so and share in some of the festivities that are a part of Christmas.

To her I say this: You haven't been being treated unequally. You've been treated as a human being with feelings, problems, needs and wants. Everyone should be so lucky.

Crime stop

Reminder to POV owners

All POV owners are reminded that leaving valuables in plain sight inside an unattended POV is an invitation to theft. When leaving your vehicle, remove all items of value and secure them in the trunk. Roll up windows and lock the doors. Keep your property safe!

If shopping on economy, pay at each department

Under German law, shoppers in department stores are required to pay for each item in the department in which it is obtained. Leaving the department before paying for an item will result in an accusation of shoplifting, even though the shopper does not leave the store. Shoppers should retain receipts for all purchases for the duration of the shopping trip.

Customer questions pricing policy; AAFES answers consumer's query

Editor:

I would like to know what kind of AAFES policy allows display models to bear a lower price tag than the items on the shelf boxed for sale? I am referring to the deceptive prices of coffee pots and vacuum cleaners. Please note that the customer must pay the higher price.

Jane Stachow

Price increases are applied to merchandise which arrives in the exchange stockroom on or after the effective date.

As this merchandise arrives and is placed on the sales floor, there is often a short period of time when the same item will be available at both the old and new price.

For this reason, display items should reflect the new sell price and in the case mentioned by the customer this was, regretfully, not accomplished.

We welcome this and all comments which provide us the opportunity to correct any situation that may cause unnecessary confusion for our customers.

Flowers, food, fun — Green Week

Would you like to sample the food of some far away land? Perhaps you'd rather stroll by gardens of bright flowers or spend some time with barnyard animals? Well, for the next ten days, you have the opportunity to do any of those things and much, much more right here in Berlin at Green Week.

The annual event which attracts over a half million visitors each year offers something for just about everyone.

Visitors can take a gourmet trip around the world by visiting Halls 15—22 where food and beverage specialties from many different countries are offered for sale and sampling.

Even a U.S. exhibit in Hall 21 awaits those who want to visit "back home." This year the exhibit, "Sunland USA," is built around a Southwestern theme. It features food with a Mexican-American flavor and other American food and merchandise.

The extent of Germany's wines is evident at Germany's Wine and Sparkling Wine Street in Hall 5. This exhibit resembles a "mini" wine festival with dealers representing Germany's wine-growing districts.

The hall of flowers (Hall 17) is certainly the most beautiful exhibit as the entire area stands in full bloom. Each participating country arranges part of this hall with plants and flowers for a competition which is held to determine the best display.

There is, of course, the livestock exhibit which appeals to children as well as to many displaced "farmers."

Green Week runs through Jan. 31. The exhibition is open daily from 10 a.m. until 7 p.m. Admission costs DM 8 for adults and DM 4 for children.

To get to Green Week, take the U-Bahn to Theodor-Heuss Platz.

ITT Tours will also take you there on Jan. 28 and 30. The bus fee is $2, and you pay your own admission. For more information, call 819-6523 or 7189.

No unaccompanied items allowed on duty train

Crew members and booking office agents in Berlin, Frankfurt, Bremerhaven and Helmstedt are not authorized to allow individuals to place unaccompanied correspondence, packages, parcels or miscellaneous freight aboard the Berlin duty trains. If special exceptions are needed they must be cleared in advance and during duty hours with the Chief, Transportation Division, Movements Branch, at 819-6916/6917.

Travel must be approved to communist countries

U.S. Army personnel and their families who plan to visit a communist country must have USA-REUR approval before making the trip. According to local AG officials, individuals should submit requests for authority to travel to a communist country, AE Form 1066, to AG Customer Service, Clay Headquarters, Bldg. 1, Room 1013, at least six weeks prior to the proposed trip.

AAFES prices increase on German-made items

European AAFES will increase prices averaging nine percent on most German-made merchandise on Jan. 26 due to an erosion of the dollar against the D-Mark. Some groceries and beverage items also will go up depending on local contracts.

An exchange spokesman said: "These increases are a reverse of last year when the dollar surged to DM 2.40—DM 2.50 levels. Even with these increases, prices for locally procured goods remain about 20 percent below last year at this time."

Prices charged at AAFES-Europe garages, cafeterias and barbershops will not go up at this time, the spokesman said. (AAFES)

'81 tax forms not in yet

The Legal Assistance Office has not yet received Federal Income Tax Forms for tax year 1981. These forms were ordered several months ago, but the Internal Revenue Service has not provided them. Announcements will be made as soon as the forms arrive.

"SPRING" INTO GREEN WEEK — The hall of flowers is just one of the exhibit areas at Green Week which opens today at the Funkturm exhibition grounds. Over a half million people are expected to visit the ten day exhibition featuring agricultural and food products from around the world. It's open daily, 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. (Photo courtesy of AMK Berlin)

Money back

Get tax break on your German purchases

If you shop on the economy, you may be eligible for a refund of the tax you pay.

Under a special agreement, the Berlin government will reimburse members of the U.S. Forces for the Added Value Tax (Mehrwertsteuer) on items costing over DM 50 which were purchased on the economy in West Berlin and West Germany.

According to CWO 2 William J. Hughes, chief, AG Personnel Actions Branch, the agreement entitles personnel to a refund of 13 percent on such purchases. This reimbursement is authorized only for U.S. military personnel stationed in Berlin and Helmstedt, U.S. civilians serving in the command and family members, if they are U.S., French, or British citizens.

Although required to pay the tax when purchasing an item, personnel may apply for a refund any time within one year after the purchase. The limit for reimbursement each calendar year is DM 2,000.

To apply, personnel must submit the original sales receipt (or invoice), and two copies to AG Customer Service, Clay Headquarters, Bldg. 1, Room 1013. Applicants then must complete two supporting applications and provide Customer Service with an address to which the refund can be mailed. Application can be made only by the sponsor or a family member, not by a third party.

The key to the application is the receipt which the salesperson must fill out when the purchase is made.

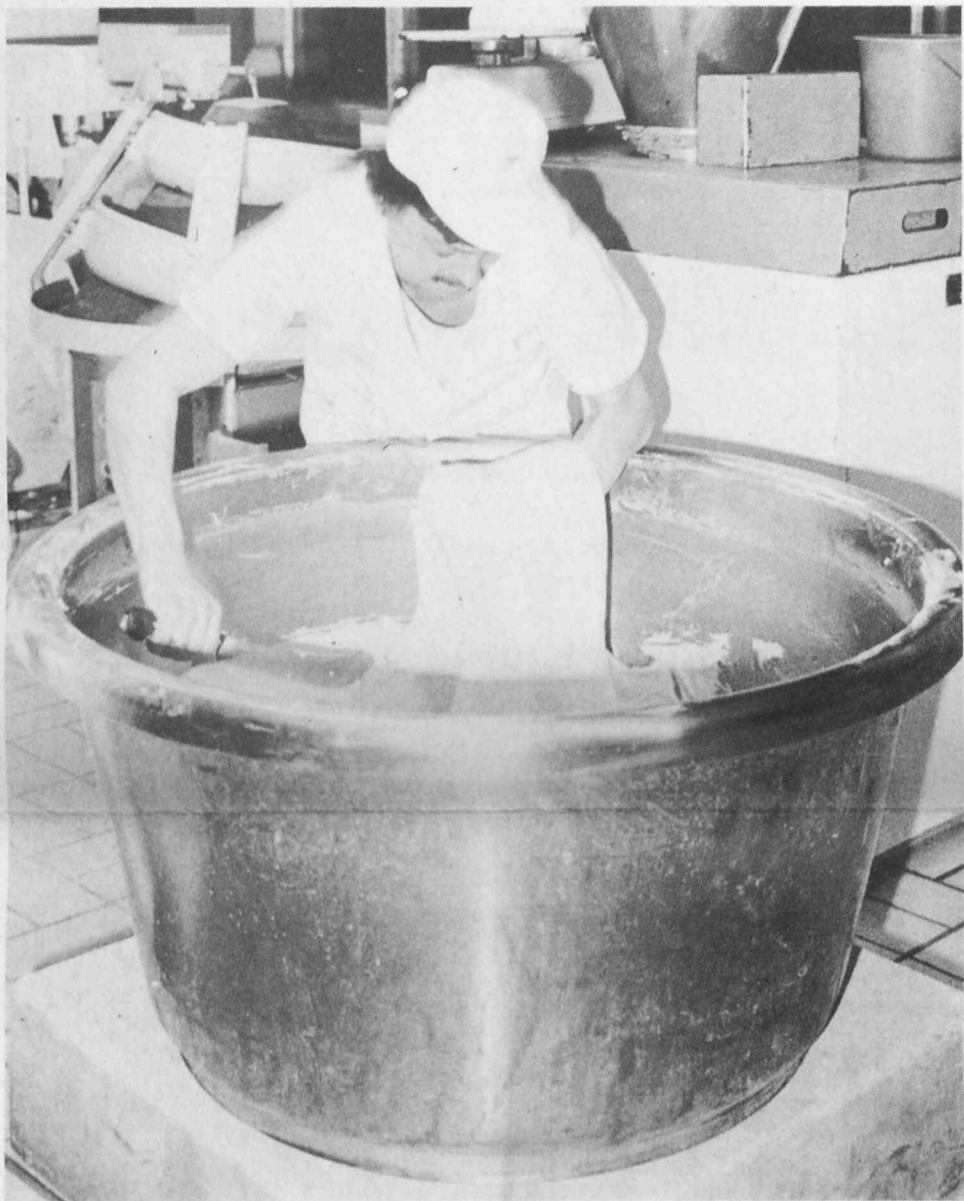

The following information is required on the receipt:

- Name and address of purchaser (applicant)
- Total price of purchase
- Nature of goods/service rendered
- Marked "paid in full"
- Date of purchase
- Amount of tax (percentage is not sufficient)
- Stamp of firm and signature
- Name and address of firm

Customer Service has wallet-size cards in both English and German which explain the procedure to salespersons.

Hughes cautioned that personnel applying for the refund "should be patient." Average processing time of a refund application is three to four months.

For additional information personnel can call 819-6291 or 6911. Applications and assistance are available at AG Customer Service, Monday—Friday, 8 a.m. to noon and 12:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.

From start to finish Berlin bakery 'rolls out' early

Story and photos
by Sue Sweeney

Ever notice that soft Berlin bread in the commissary, or wonder why the bread in the dining facility is so fresh?

It's because Berlin bread is made right here, on McNair compound at the Army's only garrison bakery.

The manager of the bakery, Wilburn Long, has a long history of cooking. Long, a soldier when he first arrived here in 1964, was a cook in 3rd Battalion. Later he became the mess sergeant of Company F, 40th Armor, Combat Support Battalion.

It's under his supervision that the bakery produces 1,000 to 5,000 pounds of dough per day. There are 10 workers, four of which are trained bakers—the rest are helpers.

The bread is made strictly from an Army recipe, developed at Ft. Lee, Va. It has no artificial flavorings or substances. Also, the bread is not air blown. This process, used by many bakeries, fill the bread with air. According to Long, Berlin bread is natural.

"When folks buy our bread in the commissary or eat it in the mess hall or somewhere, all they are paying for is the ingredients," said Long. "That's why it's just really good bread at low cost."

The bakers and helpers begin mixing the dough at about 1 a.m. After the dough is mixed, it goes to the "make-up" machine. Here it is shaped. Then it's on to the proofing oven. This oven warms the dough until it rises. It's just like a big sauna, according to Long.

Then it's on to the ovens. The bread is baked for 45 minutes to an hour at 375 degrees Fahrenheit. Then it is cooled.

"When the bread is cooling, the soldiers in Company B and C, 3rd Battalion can smell it," said Long. "The fans that we use to cool the bread blows the air towards these companies. Sometimes the soldiers, sitting at the bus stop, step in to say how good the bread smells."

The bakery makes rolls of all types, white and wheat Pullman bread, hamburger buns, braided bread and more. They supply all of the dining facilities, the bowling alley, the Air Force's needs, the commissary, the club system, the hospital and even the American embassy in Warsaw.

"We make fresh bread daily," said Long. "Each loaf takes about six hours from start to finish so it's a good thing we have the capacity to make so many loaves at a time."

Long said he believed teamwork was the key to the bakery's success. "We work together on this. When something goes wrong it affects all of us. Our officer in charge, stops by here often, just to see how things are going. It makes us feel good to know that he cares."

Enjoy it!

Defender troops go underground

by R. Gibson

Soldiers of Company B, 3rd Battalion often have to fulfill training requirements that many of us would consider distasteful, like using the sewer system as a training area.

On Tuesday the company met, by platoon, at the back gate of Andrews Barracks for a block of instruction and some practical application of subterranean movements tactics.

"We used to do a lot more of this type of training," said 1st Lt. Leslie Szabolcsi, commander of Company B, "and we talk about fighting underground, but until you actually get down there and experience it for yourself, you really don't know what it's like." Szabolcsi went on to say that the soldiers in the company find the training to be very interesting. "Anytime we get a chance at some new kind of training, they (the soldiers) just eat it up," he said.

The object of the subterranean training is to further the combat readiness to fight in a Military Operations in Urban Terrain (MOUT) environment. Lee went on to say the sewer system of the city, or any city, would and could be used in attack, escape and reconnaissance missions in a wartime situation.

Once the sewer had been cleared for training by the men from the Office of Berlin's water works, the platoons were divided into five-man teams. Only a small section of sewer was used for the "sewer walk" about 750-meters. So after a quick recon by 2nd Lt. Guy C. Smith and SFC Donald R. Hopkins, the teams began their descents, down the 30-feet or so to the dark, slick tunnels.

The team members had to walk stooped over because the tunnel was only about four-and-a-half feet around. The only light was provided by flashlight.

All of the water had been removed from the tunnel with the exception of about four or five inches, but that didn't seem to bother the soldiers much as they made their way through the tunnel. At one point in the sewer walk a small trickle of water came through the wall and into the occupied tunnel. As the first team emerged from the tunnel, slightly damp, their excitement with the new experience was evident. "Man I heard you say that there was water coming into the tunnel, and I thought we were goners!" said PFC Moses Little to Sgt. Victor Harris, team leader.

Will there be more sewer walks like this one for the members of Company B, 3rd Battalion? "In about four or five weeks we want to have another one, only the next one will be about 1.5 kilometers long with some turns and drops in the route," said Szabolcsi.

Renewing close friendships

Soldiers return hospitality to Berlin hosts with dinner

by Linda Grus

Over the holidays, many soldiers participated in the Christmas Cheer program, enjoying a holiday meal with a Berlin family. In appreciation for the Berliners' hospitality, the units will now be holding reciprocal dinners.

Combat Support Battalion showed their appreciation to their German friends, Jan. 15, by holding just that type of dinner.

The soldiers of the battalion and other separate units, such as Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Berlin Brigade, the 287th Military Police Company, and Signal Support Company, entertained their guests at the Hi-Lite Recreation Center.

There, the families and soldiers were reunited and given the chance to renew the holiday spirit, by talking about their celebration. A 298th U.S. Army Band combo provided the music for the evening.

While the guests had a few refreshments, the cooks were hurriedly putting the final touches on the evening's meal. Steamship round, baked ham, and fried chicken were featured, with buttered noodles, dressing and mixed vegetables as some of the side dishes.

After the meal, following a short speech by Brig. Gen. Leroy N. Sudath, Jr., the community commander, the soldiers presented their families with certificates of appreciation.

More than twice the number of soldiers participated in the Christmas Cheer program than in previous years, according to an official from the Community Relations Office.

The Christmas Cheer program is designed to get Berlin families and American service members together for Christmas — sharing customs and good times.

"I had a fantastic time with my German family," commented Pvt. 2 Gregory Thomas, Company F, 40th Armor, Combat Support Battalion. "We played TV video games and went sledding. Their son and daughter showed me the family album. Plus, the family had gone to Florida on vacation — the same place in Florida that I'm from! It was a blast!"

"I've been participating in Christmas Cheer for six years now," said Sp4 Michael Dillard. "I really like having a reciprocal dinner, too. It gives me a chance to show them the same hospitality they showed me. I'm going to participate in the program again next year."

Checking it out

TEAMWORK — Sp4 Clyde Dopheide and PFC Michael Dudley check each others work to be sure that they didn't overlook anything during a maintenance training exercise. Members of Company F, 40th Armor Combat Support Battalion, have been preparing themselves for a live-fire exercise scheduled for later this year in Grafenwoehr. "Tankers must know their job well in order to perform their mission," said SSgt. Raymond Daniels, tank commander. (Photo by Frederick Elliott)

Berlin basketball teams win again

ON TO SCORE — Arlene Gentry races down court for a scoring drive for the Berlin women's basketball team. The Berlin teams hosted Wildflecken this past weekend. The women's team streaked past their competition in both games. (Photo by R. Gibson)

by R. Gibson

The Berlin men's and women's basketball teams embarrassed the visiting team from Wildflecken in all four of their contests played at the Berlin Brigade Sports Center Gym, Saturday and Sunday.

In Saturday's action the men from Berlin thrashed the Wildflecken team 93-65. Bears, William Upshaw, Brian Flye and James Jacks all hit for 14 points to lead the Berlin scoring drive. The visitors gave all they had to give, but they could not stop the attack of speed and accuracy of the hometowners.

In the women's game on Saturday, the Berlin women stomped the team from Wildflecken by 80 points, and that's a record, 109-29. Arlene Gentry led Berlin's scoring drive tallying a big 24 points for the Bears. Gentry was aided by teammates Chris Keller who racked up 17 points, and Queen Risher, who added 16.

Sunday's games proved to be no more favorable to the visitors as the Berlin men again flattened Wildflecken 88-56. Edward Moss hit for 17 points to lead the tally for Berlin.

In the women's action, the game was called after four Wildflecken players fouled out forcing them to withdraw. But Berlin coach Edward Foster insisted the game continue, and the players were allowed to remain in the game. The game continued for two minutes until the visitors, plagued by injuries and down by 79 points, had no more fight in them and forfeited. The game ended with 9:42 remaining on the clock and the score 97-18.

It was a difficult lesson for the Wildflecken team to learn. Having had only three practices as a team, a well-seasoned squad like Berlin is not one to cut your teeth on.

High school begins '82 basketball season

The Berlin American High School Bears traveled to Mannheim last week for the opening game of their 1982 basketball season. Both the girls' and boys' varsity and junior varsity teams ran up against tough competition in the non-conference game. (Berlin is an AA conference team, Mannheim a AAA conference team.)

For the girls, "turnabout" was the name of the game. The varsity and JV squads each grabbed one win. In Friday's action the varsity girls dropped their game 39-37. The JV's, however, salvaged the day routing Mannheim, 22-11. Tracy Turner with 18 points and Stephanie Wise with 9 were high scorers for the varsity and JV's respectively.

The tables turned on the JV's Saturday, when they were squeezed out 19-18 with Cheryl Flack scoring 14 of Berlin's total. But this time the varsity got revenge in a real thriller that was decided in overtime. Berlin snatched the lead with 12 seconds remaining in the extra period, and held on to edge Mannheim, 46-45. Antoinette Brown was key in Berlin's win scoring eight points and dropping in the winning free throw.

BAHS's boys did not fare as well as the girls. Facing strong Mannheim teams, they could not claim a single win. In Friday and Saturday action, the JV squad lost to Mannheim, 34-30 and 42-20 respectively. Tyrone Worlds and George Moffett turned in outstanding performances in the Bears' losing effort. The varsity also fell, 57-33 and 62-48. Both Kevin Buckles, who scored 16 points, and Ron Watt, who hit for 15, played a strong game in Friday varsity action. Watt led the Berlin scoring drive on Saturday with 20 points.

The Bears are out of town playing Bitburg in their first conference match-up today and tomorrow. They will host Zweibruecken next weekend in the season's first home contest.

The community is invited to attend the games at the Sports Center gym beginning at 3:30 p.m. Friday and 9 a.m. Saturday. The coach for the boy's teams is Jim Cobb. The girls' teams are coached by Constance Carpenter and Tom Contreras.

Open bowling can be an exciting pastime

Would you believe that many nights bowling lanes go unused at the Sports Center and at McNair because no one is there to bowl. If you're looking for a something to do, a good place to go would be to the bowling centers.

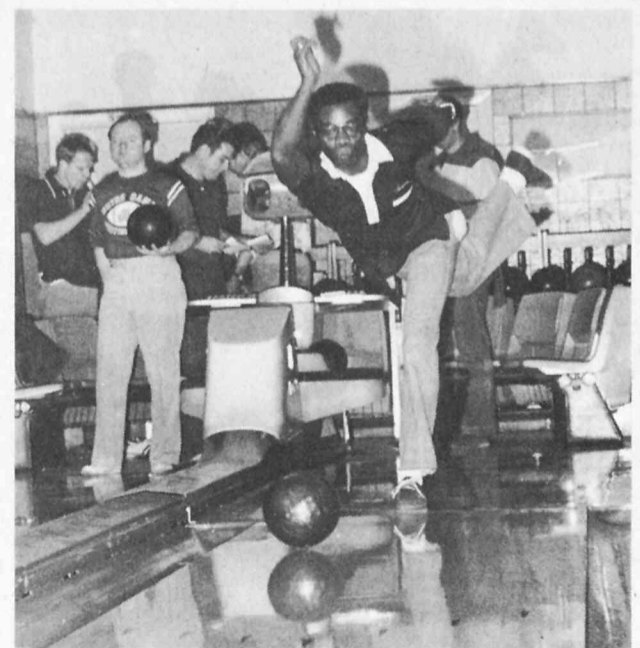

The Berlin Brigade Bowling lanes at the Sports Center are open for bowling every day. The hours are Monday to Friday from 11 a.m. until 11 p.m., and on weekends from noon to 11 p.m.

The McNair lanes are open from 5 to 10:30 p.m. on Monday to Friday and from 2 until 10:30 p.m. on weekends.

The Andrews lanes are open only by special reservation and arrangements must be made through the Sports Center by calling 819-6518/6775.

Bowlers can rent shoes from the bowling centers for 25 cents. The cost to bowl one lane is 75 cents.

If you plan on going out for an evening of bowling, it would be advisable to call the lanes in advance to see if lanes are available.

Emergencies

was worthy of an Academy Award. He gave Ellison practice in handling a stomach wound, which would have tasked even the most competent of medics. (Photo by Frank Jones)

The exercise was divided into three different areas, with separate teams going to each of the sites. When the call came into the aid station, the duty NCO had to plot the location of each of the areas, and send a team of medics to that area. Details were not given, so it was up to the teams to locate where the casualties actually were. Teams were dispersed to Checkpoint Bravo, Truman Plaza Bus Terminal and the Provost Marshal building at Andrews.

At each of these areas soldiers were acting as casualties, and an NCO was there to prepare the scene and the casualties for the medics' arrival. Along with Ashmore were five victims with simulated injuries ranging all the way from a slight hand wound to a soldier who was already dead.

When the medical teams arrived at each area, it was their responsibility to determine the extent of each person's injuries and to establish the priority of treatment at the scene. As the casualties were treated, they were given an identification tag and classified as to further treatment when they reached the aid station.

The ambulance attendants were required to prepare their vehicle for the type of casualty and to get the casualties on the vehicle and to the aid station safely. While enroute a medic rode with the casualty monitoring vital signs, providing other treatment as required and preparing the paperwork necessary to identify the victim and his injuries for the aid station.

When the ambulance arrived at the 2nd Battalion aid station, the victim's name was entered into a casualty report and immediately his condition was checked. The medical officer or NCO then referred the casualty to various treatment areas based on the extent of the injuries.

There he was treated, and for the patient that was the end of the exercise. After the last casualty had been seen and the exercise completed, everyone was told in what areas they had done well, and in what areas they needed to work on procedures.

According to Wilson, the exercise was a tremendous success and gave the soldiers in every section something to do, and a goal to work toward.

Don't complete puzzle — use phone wisely

by Linda Grus

Every minute you—the service or family member—spend on the phone, could mean another piece added to a hostile agent's puzzle.

The information you might give out over the phone, added to information others have given out, helps hostile agents get a complete picture of happenings in the command.

That's why it's so important for members of the community here to watch what they say on the phone.

Of course any type of classified information should never be discussed over the phone. The following are other subjects that shouldn't be discussed:

- Any type of information concerning a training exercise or "For Official Use Only" information;
- and, Project, operation or exercise nicknames associated in any way with a classified subject (including double talk to get around it).

The list doesn't stop there, however. There are other "sensitive" items a hostile agent would like to know to complete the pieces of his puzzle.

Such things as troop movements, personnel strengths of units, new equipment, itineraries of VIP's, even information on the operational status of vehicles and troop morale should never be talked about on the telephone.

For a more detailed listing of the command's telephone security policy, see the front inside cover of the command telephone book.

According to Sgt. Richard L. Nolan, operations sergeant for Detachment 0 here, there are a few ways you can use the telephone wisely.

Everyone should answer the phone including, "This line is not secure." This phrase is required, in fact, by USAREUR Supplement 1 to Army Regulation 530-2.

"If someone you're speaking with on the phone starts talking about something he or she shouldn't be, the best thing to do is to hang up," said Nolan. "If you do this, it not only prevents more information from getting out, it will also remind the person on the phone that he or she was doing something wrong."

"The signal security specialists from Detachment 0 are not out to prosecute," commented Nolan. "We just advise the commander on what kinds of violations are taking place. We also give classes to soldiers through the School of Standards, and units that request our help," added Nolan.

A lot of times revealing "sensitive" information could be prevented by using another means of communication. "The biggest violators come from the same offices," said Nolan. "All they need to do is to go talk to their co-worker in person. If the people aren't in the same office, they can use the Distribution Center to get their message through. It's slower, but safer."

Family members in the community aren't exempt from having their phones monitored by hostile agents either. So, they should also remember to watch what they say over the phones, said Nolan.

Remember, telephone security is everybody's business.

Berlin hosts soldiers for special music show

More than 1,000 members of the American community had the opportunity to see a Broadway musical review Sunday as guests of the Berlin city government.

As a gesture of friendship, Berlin's Governing Mayor, Richard von Weizsaecker, arranged a special performance of "Bubbling Brown Sugar" for service members of the U.S. Command, Berlin, and their families. The cost of the performance, about DM 30,000, was paid for by the Berlin Senat, according to a government official.

Wilhelm A. Kewenig, the senator for culture, welcomed the Americans at the Theatre des Westens and told them the performance was a way for the Berliners "to show our gratitude for all you have done for us."

The performance by the traveling Broadway cast was enthusiastically received by those who attended. A lengthy ovation followed the performance which featured the music and entertainment of Harlem in the 1920's.

"It was a top flight entertaining show," said Lt. Col. Bernard F. Griffard, deputy chief of staff for community affairs. "The American community should be grateful to the Berliners for this very visible demonstration of their support."
