Redeye teams take top three slots

Of the 62 teams competing in the recent USAREUR Air Defense Live Fire Evaluation in Crete, the teams from Berlin Brigade took first, second and third place.

The Brigade was represented by six Redeye teams the remainder of which all scored within the top 20 percent of the competition.

Berlin was also first in the overall major command category with a composite score of 91.74 percent. The next closest competitor was the 41st Brigade, V Corp with a 88.78 percent score.

SSgt Edward Gordon was the 1st place team chief with Sp4 Francis Rowsick as his gunner. Their composite score was 95.16. Close behind and rated second was Sgt. Mark Jones and Sp4 Michael Ferraro at 95.00, followed by Cpl. Micker Richardson and Sp4 Michael Leehan at 93.15.

In an awards ceremony Monday at the office of the brigade commander, these soldiers were awarded the Army Achievement Medal for their performance in Crete.

Also falling in the top 20 percent were the three remaining Berlin teams including SSgt. William Walker and PFC Jimmy Cook, Sgt. Francisco Renteria and Sp4 Stephen Ward, Sgt. Bruce Johnson and PFC Leroy Jones.

The evaluation was broken down into four categories, mixing individual and team proficiency. Aircraft recognition, written hardware test, hands-on crew drills and the live-fire exercise (in which Berlin hit six for six) were part of the event.

This annual event allows Air Defense sections across USAREUR to compete against each other and evaluate their own wartime capability. This evaluation was the first step in a programmed transition of the Air Defense training program.

Artillerymen compete in FASCRES

The Soldiers of Battery C, 94th Field Artillery last week took part in the Field Artillery Section Crew Readiness Evaluation (FASCRES), which determines the best howitzer section within the battery. For the third time in five years, the sixth howitzer section proved again to be the winner.

Scoring 885 points out of a possible 900, the sixth howitzer section headed by SSgt. Edward L. Hampton demonstrated their ability to function as a team. "I felt as though anyone of the six howitzer sections could have won the FASCRES award. Because of the strong motivation and pride shown by the men in each section, the competition for the best howitzer section was more of a challenge to finish on top," said Hampton.

The FASCRES is a performance test of the skills that are essential to the successful accomplishment of the mission of each individual howitzer section. Although many of the tasks are evaluated on the basis of individual performance, the FASCRES test in fact measures the ability of the section to function as a team.

The FASCRES test consists of five phases. It evaluates the ability of the section chief to organize and train personnel into a cohesive and effective fighting unit. The FASCRES test consists of a written test on general military knowledge, preparation for firing operations, deliberate occupation, fire missions, and critique on the performance of individual sections.

Pride and incentive helped sixth section beat out the third section (874) by eleven points. "Sixth section," said Sp4 Aaron McReynolds, "outscored and beat all howitzers during the timed hands on events. We proved again to be the best."

Individuals responsible for regaining the title for sixth section were McReynolds, Sgt. Michael Goodman, Sp4 Danny Anderson, Sp4 Carlos Serrano and PFC James Delong.

MEMORIAL DAY

May 30 1984

Holiday services at chapel

On May 28 at 9 a.m., a Memorial Day commemorative service will be held at the Mail Chapel on Hüttenweg.

This service, which will offer special recognition of the contributions of the retired members of the armed forces, will coincide with an especially significant ceremony to be held at Arlington National Cemetery—the burial of the remains of an unknown soldier from the Vietnam Conflict.

Following the services, a visit will be paid to the grave of a retired member of the armed forces in the adjoining Waldfriedhof cemetery. All retirees and survivors of deceased military, active or retired, are urged to attend this special ceremony in recognition of their contribution to the military.

The Secretary of Defense, Caspar W. Weinberger earlier this month announced his decision to proceed with the interment of an unknown service member from the Vietnam era in the Tomb of the Unknowns at Arlington National Cemetery.

“The Tomb of the Unknowns is considered by many to be the greatest national monument to those who served and fought and died during our wars,” said Weinberger. “Those fine Americans who placed duty to their country above all else deserve the highest recognition we can offer.

“We are now able to honor our Vietnam Veterans, those returned and those still missing, by placing one of their fallen comrades-in-arms alongside the national heroes of previous wars at the Tomb of the Unknowns.

“There is no question,” Weinberger added, “that this will be a momentous occasion of great significance to all Americans, particularly those who served during the Vietnam war and the families of those still missing.”

Honoring American heroes

From President Reagan . . .

Today America honors those who have died in the service of their country. The voices of fallen friends and loved ones still echo in our ears and the wounds left by their passing have yet to heal.

Each day we enjoy the freedom these brave Americans fought and died to preserve. We are comforted by the spirit of courage and patriotism they left behind. We see and feel these qualities all around us when we pledge allegiance to our flag or join together to sing our national anthem. We are particularly aware of them when we celebrate this special day and honor the memory of those we have lost.

You the men and women of the armed forces exemplify that spirit. You uphold the proud tradition of all those in uniform who went before you. Your daily efforts around the world demonstrate your commitment to ensure that those brave men and women who made the ultimate sacrifice shall not have died in vain.

On this Memorial Day, 1984, I ask the American people to join with me in renewing our pledge to keep this great nation strong, free and at peace. There can be no better way of honoring our military heroes, both living and dead.

May God bless you and all you do for all of us.

From CINCUSAREUR . . .

On Memorial Day we honor those who have gone before us to set the strong examples of duty, honor and country that we look to in our day-to-day commitment to excellence.

The freedom we enjoy today was won and preserved with too big a price to be taken for granted. The decades of peace secured by individual and national sacrifices should inspire us to build on the foundation established by heroic and dedicated men and women. They refused to shirk from dangerous, tough challenges. We can do no less.

Month of military child

May has been designated as The Month of the Military Child. The following is a letter from the community commander commemorating the occasion.

“The Association of Young Children, Europe, for many years has sponsored the ‘Week of the Young Child.’ Last year and again this year, the Secretary of Defense has taken the Association’s idea, broadened it and declared ‘May,’ the ‘Month of the Military Child.’

In addition to providing special activities and events for children and their families, the ‘Month of the Military Child’ also focuses attention on the essential role that military child development centers, schools and youth activities play in fostering readiness, as well as enhancing the quality of life for military families. Our children’s social, emotional, intellectual and physical growth are directly influenced by these organizations.

Many community organizations have joined together to make the month of ‘May’ an exceptional one for you and your child. I wish to take this opportunity to thank the many people and organizations that provide the services for our children.

Sincerely,

Soldier saves life

A former soldier from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Berlin Brigade, SFC Bob Garza, club manager, was credited with saving the life of a 7-year-old girl who became trapped underwater at a Padre Island, Texas resort swimming pool.

The girl was underwater for nearly two minutes when Garza spotted her and pulled her out. He had had to struggle underwater for nearly two minutes to free the girls and from the pools drain cover.

When Garza finally surfaced with the girl she was unconscious and had stopped breathing. According to local newspaper reports, "Garza administered mouth-to-mouth resuscitation for about 10 minutes amidst shouts from bystanders who told him he was hurting the girl by squeezing her nose."

Garza, however, remained calm and continued his resuscitation efforts until paramedics arrived on the scene. Garza, it was reported, credited his Army training in CPR in making the difference. At the time of the incident, Garza had been attending a softball tournament and was staying at the resort.

Holiday banking

On Monday, the Community Banking Facilities at Truman Plaza, Andrews, and TCA, the Amexco Travel Agency, the Federal Credit Union, and the Finance and Accounting Office will be closed. The Community Banking Facility located at McNair will be open from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. for business as usual.

On Thursday, all Berlin Community Banking Facilities (including TCA and Amexco Travel Agency) will be closed. The Federal Credit Union and the Finance and Accounting Office will be open as usual.

All Berlin Community Banking Facilities will consider Wednesday to be the official end of month payday. Treasury checks dated May 31, will be cashed at all facilities. Direct Deposit and Sure Pay will be in American Express accounts on May 30.

Headquarters USAREUR and USAFAC have been unable to authorize an early payday, but American Express has agreed to cash payroll checks on May 30 provided they are not delayed in the mail system. Sgt. Morales Club: only the best need apply

by Tom Jackson

For a NCO to be elected into the Sgt. Morales Club, he has to first receive a 100 percent vote of confidence by all members of what has to be the toughest board in the Army.

A perfect uniform and military bearing is not enough. Memorizing every training manual and regulation in the Army is not enough. Being an strac soldier may help to get you in front of the board, but from that point on the one trait the nominee must demonstrate is leadership: with a capital L.

Last month three new soldiers were elected into the Sgt. Morales Club here. They are SSgt. Raymond Daniels, 40th Armor; SFC Robert Davis, Company C, 4th Battalion; and SSgt. Dennis Midkiff, Company A, 3rd Battalion.

That brings the total number elected in the last two quarters to five, two of which, SSgt. Rocky Williams, Battery C, 94th Field Artillery and SFC Luis Jordan, Co. B, 4th Battalion, were elected in December. Overall there are just 13 Sgt. Morales Club members in the Berlin Brigade.

CSM Dennis Duncan, who presides over each of these quarterly boards said of the Sgt. Morales boards, "The questions we ask have to do with soldier type programs. They have to know where to get their soldiers help, whether it's AER, ACS, CHAMPUS, drug and alcohol programs or the education system, NCOES, correspondence courses, high school completion or college credits. We concentrate on those areas an NCO has to know in order to give guidance and solve the problems of the soldiers under him."

The board also asks the nominees how they might solve any of a number of hypothetical problem situations, said Duncan.

These are tests of leadership ability. They often require an opinionated response and don't always have a right or wrong answer. But they do reveal insights into the nominee's character, his ability to apply military and leadership skills to a new problem and come up with a creative solution.

Davis, one of the new members to the Sgt. Morales Club here, put it this way, "The questions asked for an opinionated response, but your answer had to be based on sound Army principles. It requires a flexibility in leadership style. You have to develop a leadership style that you are comfortable with yet one that also maintains the needs of the Army."

To qualify to go before the Sgt. Morales board a soldier must be within the ranks of corporal to E-7 and be currently supervising a minimum of two subordinates. Here in Berlin, the soldier must first go before and be nominated by a battalion level pre-board before going on to the brigade board.

To be selected there, the soldier must get a vote of approval from every member of the board and occasionally, said Duncan, a non-voting Sgt. Morales Club member may sit on the board and ask questions or give his opinion.

"There are no quotas" said Duncan. "If six soldiers appear before the board, we can select all six or we can select none and there have been quarters when we didn't select any."

Once a soldier is elected into the club they are given a letter of introduction from the commanding general of USAREUR to be given to their next commander stateside. "Once they get back they will be looked up to and they have to prove themselves over and over again," said Duncan. "It's like living in a glass house."

But if there were not Sgt. Morales boards to determine who should and who should not be a member, one sure way of finding the absolute best NCOs in a unit would be to look at their subordinates, their squads, sections and platoons. Wherever you find high morale, good training, skilled, ambitious and well cared for soldiers, you are likely to find NCOs of Sgt. Morales' caliber leading them.

"Not only do you have to know your career field and MOS," said Davis, "but you have to know all of the details of their career field as well. It takes a lot of research to get an in-depth picture of what's required in each MOS and it's not the kind of work you can do during normal duty hours."

Davis added that seeking membership in the Sgt. Morales Club can never be viewed as a personal or selfish goal.

"It's not a matter of what you as an individual can do but what your subordinates can accomplish; taking pride not in your individual achievements but in how well your team performs and what they can add to the overall goals of the unit and the Army," he said.

And the ability to summons this sort of performance from one's subordinates is what the Sgt. Morales board members seek. Qualities that are often subjective and hard to describe, but nonetheless, qualities that can be recognized when one sees them.

"The soldiers we select can tell you that we are not easy on them," said Duncan. "And even more so, the ones who were not selected can attest to how difficult the board is.

"No man wants something merely given to him. To hand out awards without requiring the soldier to struggle to earn it lessens the value of the award."

Those are the standards of the Sgt. Morales Club...no quotas to fill and 100 percent approval. In a word, leadership, not the ability to force people, but inspire them to do their best.

The Sgt. Morales story

Sgt. Morales is the fictitious name of a very real noncommissioned officer who, as a squad leader, consistently demonstrated the highest qualities of leadership, professionalism and regard for the welfare of his soldiers.

After completing a tour with a stateside division, Sgt. Morales was selected for and overseas tour in Germany. But before coming to Germany, he completed his high school education, continued to improve his command of the English language and maintained himself in top physical condition.

Arriving in Germany, Sgt. Morales immediately put his experience and leadership techniques to good use.

He began his duty day in the barracks when his squad awoke. He led his soldiers in physical training, ate his meals in the unit dining facility, organized and supervised the work details and prepared the squad for the day's training requirements. He was never afraid to get his hands dirty.

Sgt. Morales insured that the members of his squad were well trained in their Military Occupational Specialties. He frequently used the Soldiers Manual and designated tasks that were required during the hands-on portion of the Skill Qualification Test. In addition, he stressed the tactical, technical know-how that makes a better soldier.

Race relations and equal opportunity were not new to him...he lived them.

Sgt. Morales kept a leader's notebook containing personal data for each soldier. He kept a job book on each soldier based on that soldier's proficiency. He counseled his soldiers monthly in personal and job performance, reflecting both complimentary and critical information. These sources of information were used to guide his soldiers in promotions, proficiency and career development, including their professional and academic education.

He frequently held meetings with his squad, keeping members informed of what was going on, discussing training and problems and seeking recommendations for improvement. The soldiers in Sgt. Morales squad knew exactly where they stood.

His squad was united, including family members and friends, through social gatherings in the unit and community. He took pride that no squad member had ever been absent without leave.

Sgt. Morales was proud of his personnel, their outward appearance, their conduct and bearing, the way they wore their uniforms. He insured newly assigned members were properly oriented, sponsored, processed and introduced to all other squad members at the first opportunity. Rehabs to his squad were accepted and treated on the same level as newly assigned squad members. He took additional steps in guidance, counseling and training to help the rehabs become effective members of the team.

Sgt. Morales led by example. He showed true concern for the soldier and family members. He took great pride in his soldiers, his unit and his country. Sgt. Morales was a member of the NATO team. He was a leader.

MAINTENANCE rates high on the list of priorities for SSgt. Dennis Midkiff, Co. A, 3rd Bn., who was elected into the Sgt. Morales Club in March.

Rodeo Dahlem Buckin' broncs for a cause

COWBOYS AND COWGIRLS await their turn at the Rodeo on Sunday.

by William Kirkland

Rodeo-USA winds down this weekend after a two-week stay in Berlin. This means country music, cold beer, western food and plenty of action for rodeo fans.

Bare-back riding, bull riding, calf-roping and barrel racing are a few of the events that will test the skills of cowboys from all over Europe. As many as 120 members of the European Rodeo Cowboys Association will drop their names into a hat in hopes of having them drawn and matched with the wildest, meanest horse or bull possible.

It helps to be "a little crazy" before climbing on top of a 2000-pound Brahman bull, according to Larry Brune, vice-president of the Berlin Chapter of ERCA. "Mainly, cowboys enjoy the challenge of overcoming not only the bucking of the horse or bull, but also their own fears while making a favorable impression on the judges. That's not easy to do in only 8 seconds of riding time," Brune added.

James Hill, at 37, is the oldest riding member of the Berlin Chapter of ERCA. He said he enjoys the thrill and excitement of the sport and added that once it gets in your blood, you're hooked for life. "Many of the cowboys were raised on ranches and grew up respecting the freedom and unbroken spirit of rodeo animals. To them, the ultimate thrill is a good 8-second ride on a half-wild bull," Brune said.

Those attending the rodeo will find more than just cowboys and wild horses. You may bump into Weener Hägler and his milk shake-drinking donkey, "Mex-ci." There is also "Hugo the Steer," who is in the Guinness Book of World Records for having been in more than 6,000 rodeos. And don't forget the two rodeo clowns, who some say are the bravest of all the cowboys.

There are also food booths, which do more than share American food with Berliners. If you buy a hamburger, for example, you are helping to support the Signal Support NCO Fund. They will use profits from their booth to support company-level social activities, and Christmas and Thanksgiving projects at a local orphanage.

If you buy chili from the VFW booth, you help support the many veterans programs they are involved in, such as scholarships, hospital programs, and scouting activities.

Army Community Service runs the baked potato and corn-on-the-cob booths. Their profits go to support child care, and awards for their volunteers, who donate hundreds of hours for community service.

The Warrant Officers Association sells ice cream at the rodeo. Some of the activities they support include college scholarships, helping to buy a piano at John F. Kennedy School, and supporting the ACS Christmas program by donating turkeys to needy families.

There is also heavy support from Youth Activities, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, and recreation centers from Andrews and McNair, the Morale Support Activities Division, who sponsored the rodeo, and other groups throughout the command.

The ERCA is also involved in the behind-the-scenes activity. They tend stock, work at the booths at the Volksfest and the TCA open house. They help support several local charities with their earnings. Last year at Christmas they bought presents and put on a mock shootout for a local handicapped children's hospital, and this year they provided rodeo tickets for many of those same children.

It takes thousands of hours of work and cooperation to create the magic that is Rodeo-USA, but the gleam in the eyes of the children make it worth the effort.

4th Bn. conducts marksmanship program

by Damon Elder

The 4th Battalion, 6th Infantry, in an attempt to improve the level of marksmanship proficiency within the battalion, has initiated a program of intensive training and carefully evaluated live-fire geared to bring the individual soldier to the peak of readiness for basic rifle marksmanship.

The program, which is conducted within a 48 hour period, takes the individual soldier through every phase of marksmanship training.

Beginning on the morning of day one, the soldier is sent through six pre-firing stations. The primary rifle instruction includes exercises in target alignment and sight picture, proper shooting positions, trigger squeeze, and a class on the different systems of sights which are used on the M16A1 rifle. This period of instruction lasts approximately four hours.

The next phase of instruction requires the individual to obtain a battle sight zero with the M16A1 within twelve rounds. If the individual fails to obtain tight shot groups or for some other reason is unable to zero, he then returns to primary rifle instruction for further training.

The program continues with live-fire exercises in slow fire, time fire, and known distance targets at ranges of two hundred and three hundred meters. If at any point in these exercises the soldier is unable to hit the required number of targets, or fails to demonstrate the proper shooting techniques, he is returned to primary rifle instruction. The first day ends with dinner and an early "lights out", as troops crawl into their bedrolls in GP medium tents only fifty meters from the ranges where they will qualify the next day.

Day two begins with field fire exercises in which the soldier fires on the lanes where he will qualify during record fire. If the required number of targets do not fall, it's back to primary rifle instruction. Record fire is the culmination of 12 to 14 hours of intensive training. Each troop has the added incentive that a score of 38 out of a possible 40 targets will earn him the coveted TRIAD coin, and 24 targets or less will send him back to primary rifle instruction.

The units which have fired at the 4th Battalion, 6th Infantry training site have shown the value of the intensive training approach, with each unit thus far having more than 50 percent expert scores. Additionally, more than 100 TRIAD coins have been won.

Top seeded Yzaguirre keeps getting better

Jaclyn Yzaguirre, five feet four of dark eyed energy is a "natural" when it comes to sport, and a natural born winner, too. "All sport is competitive, and when I play I play to win." The sport she's currently dominating is racquetball.

She started to play racquetball when she joined the Army three and a half years ago, but before that "I played tennis, golf, softball and basketball, and I still do," she says. She also finds time to bowl, and get involved with children.

As far as being a natural is concerned, she had been playing racquetball for two weeks, when she entered her first tournament and won first place, and from there on she never looked back. Nobody taught her, she just watched and tried and it was obviously a winning competition.

This year Jaclyn was the top seeded woman player in the All-Army Competition, coming to the contest and undefeated through the USCOB Championships and USAREUR Championships to reach the All-Army contest. For the second time, she took first place, and moved on to the Inter-Service Championships where she was placed third in 1983.

This year she was determined to do better, and she did, remaining undefeated until the final contest with the reigning Air Force Champion, winner of the Interservice contest last year, Barbara Falckenbury. Falckenbury has been playing racquetball since she was eight years old, and is in the semi-pro class. Up until this year, she had never been beaten in any game, but this time, the 22 year-old Yzaguirre lost the match, but managed to defeat the reigning champion in one game.

"I was playing better than ever before," was Jaclyn's comment, "I wanted to improve on my 3rd place from last year, and I did, I came in second and I felt good. Next year I intend to try again, and this time hopefully I'll make it through to first place."

"I feel kind of proud too, that in all of this year's contest the only defeats I suffered were those final two games in the last match."

Now proud owner of a bronze and a silver medal, Jaclyn has a place all picked out for the third and the best. However, she's not resting on her laurels. She's into softball, and probably volleyball. "I will be coaching children again, because, that's where my main interest lies, in child psychology, and it's what I hope to work in when I leave the Army in 1986. I'd like to work with exceptional children, using my background in sport to help them widen their lives, and improve their abilities."

Jaclyn boasts a little about her mixed background.

"It's not everybody who can mix up Spanish, German, and Irish, and come up with a Basque name, and I suppose it's this mixture that has given me an interest in languages too." It must be something, Jaclyn speaks French, Turkish, Spanish and "a little bit of Russian". At the moment she's working of German, but "it's pretty hard" was her comment.

If you ask her what her feelings are about competition sport, she answers, "well every tournament is a combat area, and I'm competitive about it. I tend to be underestimated because I'm short, but I have finesse and endurance, and I'm in there to win."

Berlin Scoreboard

Sailing the Baltic: a vacation adventure

Story and photos by Michael Leyva

When we finally slipped our mooring at the British Kiel Yacht Club sometime around 10 a.m., we were prepared to return shortly.

The situation was grim. Ahead of us was some of the thickest fog the area had experienced in over twenty years; visibility thirty feet at best. The senior British sailor told us the moisture that had rapidly collected on our wool jackets and caps was a sign this was a sea fog and that we could expect it to get worse before it got better. Out there . . . somewhere . . . were ships in the channel too large to change course rapidly should our courses cross.

We were aboard the HMS Kranich, a British war prize built in 1936, measuring 15 meters (50 feet), weighing 16 tons and boasting 100 square meters (330 feet) of sail. Our crew was evenly divided between British sailors from the Royal Corps of Engineers, who are charged with maintaining and running the club, and four Americans from the Berlin military community, all but myself involved in sailing activities at the Wannsee Recreation Center.

I had heard of this Baltic sailing adventure through friends at the rec center and decided it was something I had to try. Upon seeing the boat, meeting the crew and running through the basics of sailing a craft this size, I felt confident that this would be an exciting experience.

An exciting experience was exactly what I was having up on the foredeck, looking out for the daily ferries and cargo ships that use the shipping lanes in and out of Kiel, knowing all the time that an actual sighting could mean the rapid end to a voyage just begun.

At one point I was studying the unyielding wall of fog straight off the bow when the air was shattered by a foghorn so loud it made the deck vibrate beneath my feet. I was so close off our starboard side that I felt I could touch it . . . but I couldn't see it! While I still had confidence in the ship and crew, it was clear that all the confidence in the world would be useless in fending off a 100,000 ton oil tanker.

Our destination that morning was Faaborg, on the Danish coast, and normal sailing time was between eight and ten hours with a decent wind. Under present conditions — thick fog, no wind — we could expect to do some night sailing before making land. The skipper decided to continue on our way in spite of the low visibility, moving from channel marker to channel marker and steering by compass readings, heading towards the open water of the bay. Once we were clear of the shipping lanes, I felt the tension among the crew ease up and I began to enjoy the sense of quiet isolation we felt under our halfsphere of diffused gray mist.

As the day progressed and morning turned into afternoon, the sun began to burn off the fog somewhat and things on board picked up as we began to take care of the business of sailing. The watch system was explained and four hour watches were established. The sails were trimmed, ropes coiled and stowed and, as the visibility increased to half a mile or so, navigational buoys were located. Late in the afternoon we were chased out of an uncharted military exercise area by a German mine sweeper who charged us with blaring horns and warning flares.

The skipper wisely decided that the crew, having been under a lot of pressure all day, was badly in need of some life-giving provisions (read beer) and ordered a generous ration to be distributed and consumed before the situation became serious. Despite a change for the better in the weather and general mood of the crew, we were still making less than three knots and decided to motor in the rest of the way to Faaborg so as to allow for an early start the next day.

The following morning dawned clear and bright and it was characteristic of what we could expect for the rest of the voyage. The wind was blowing with enough force to give us six to eight knots under full sail. After our slow, if harrowing, first day, this kind of speed was a welcome thrill and our British mates assured us that we'd do much better than this on a good day. The sly looks on their faces made me a bit apprehensive about what they meant by "a good day."

Sailing past the coast of Denmark, a patchwork of green pastures, thick forests, brightly painted houses and neat rows of crops, framed by the sky and the water, gave me the feeling of being in a magical land far removed from my usual duties in Berlin. Out there on the water, sun pouring down, I felt the adventurer in me coming out and let the peace and solitude that gliding along under wind power inspires soak in and refresh me. A turn at the helm, everybody gets one, makes you feel like you're a part of everything that's going on, guiding this vessel through another world.

The people who run these charters have your vacation in mind all the time and while they're responsible for your safety, they want you to have a memorable and enjoyable time. You pick the trip itinerary and the crew, and they supply the rest — yacht, skipper and charts. They'll brief everyone on safety procedures, outfit you with oilskins and rubber boots, and run you through the yacht's general operations (use of the galley, use of the water pumps, etc.).

Everyone pulls their share on these boats and you can expect to learn at least the basics of sail rigging, knots and their functions, holding a course heading (not as easy as it sounds), docking procedures and, if you're aboard one of the 15 meter yachts, the pride of the fleet, even brass polishing! The British have a certain reputation for excellence to uphold and the 20 minutes spent on cleaning up the boat's brass and brightwork are well rewarded in port as people gather on the dockside to admire these rare and beautiful crafts.

While the stopovers in Danish ports are nice breaks from a long day on the water, the real fun starts when you clear the harbors and hit the open water in a force 5 wind. The boats are designed to sail there best heeled over on their side and once the sails are trimmed, hold onto your hat! Screaming down a channel or across a bay you can be doing better than 10 knots without really trying. In higher winds — force 8 winds are not infrequent — you can find you're off the speed indicator — and it reads up to 12 knots. Though hooting and hollering is not in the British sailing tradition, they can be quite tolerant of the inexperienced's uncontrollable enthusiasm.

A sailing vacation can be a wonderful break from your normal schedule and the BKYC makes it affordable as well as enjoyable. The cost of chartering a yacht, divided by the seven crew members, comes to approximately DM 150 with a temporary club membership, for a full week of sailing. An additional $40-50 for food and some spending money for stopovers in Denmark or Sweden and you're on your way to an unusual and refreshing experience.

August and September is a good time to go as the BKYC expect to have a lot of yachts available due to British troops commitments. It's also the best time of the year to sail in the Baltic according to the locals. Contact the BKYC, c/o Sail Training Wing, British Forces Post Office 108, Prieser Strasse 16A, 2300 Kiel 17.

HEELING TO is the price you must pay if you want to go fast.

FOG BOUND AND NO WIND can be a harrowing experience, waiting and watching for the huge freighters that loom in the unseen distance.
