Suddath leaves Berlin Bde.

In a brief, simple and dignified ceremony at 4 Juli Platz Wednesday, Maj. Gen. Leroy N. Suddath Jr., the departing commander of the Berlin Brigade, handed the brigade flag and the reigns of power to Col. Frank S. Adams, the deputy brigade commander.

Adams will serve as brigade commander until a replacement can be found for Brig. Gen. William S. Carpenter Jr., who was, until his nomination for a second star, scheduled to take command of the brigade.

Suddath has served as brigade commander for the last two and a half years, during a greater part of the Army's recent modernization programs. In line with those goals, Suddath instituted such programs as the Triad awards for excellence in marksmanship, soldier skills and physical fitness and continued to refine and develop the brigade's hallmark Combat In Cities training programs.

Of his time in Berlin Suddath said, "It has certainly been the high point of my military career, both personally and professionally."

Both he and his wife Carol have been highly active in community and German-American events.

6/502 engages in live fire exercises

By Damon R. Elder
6/502 Inf. Correspondent

The men of the 6th Bn settled into temporary residence at the Wildeflecken training area last weekend in preparation for two weeks of live-fire and conventional combat skills training.

The training scenario at the mountainous West German training site will be geared towards giving live fire experience to gunners, who because of safety limitations, are unable to actually fire their weapons at the range facilities in Berlin. Among the most notable of these are the mortar crews and anti-tank gunners of the battalion.

Although certain of the battalions heavier weapons teams are limited to electronic simulations and dry fire exercises while in Berlin, they have in the past developed a reputation for gunnery excellence on the Wildeflecken ranges. This will be put to the test during the live fire exercises, which will demand both speed and accuracy from the gunners and crews participating.

In the mean time the battalion is maintaining its standards in the areas of maintenance and everyone's favorite, physical readiness training. On the first morning in Wildeflecken the various elements of the battalion made an impression on their temporary neighbors on the post with a Berlin style PT formation and run at 5:30 a.m. Although direct comment from the locally assigned personnel was not volunteered, the disbelieving faces which appeared in barracks windows as the cadence calling troops jogged by may indicate that Sunday morning PT runs are some what rare here.

The battalion support elements have done an admirable job thus far, providing for feeding, medical care, and chaplain support for the battalion, thus allowing the battalion freedom in organizing the training schedule with a minimum of coordination necessary with local support units.

The battalion has also arranged for mail and limited transport of packages to the soldiers free of charge.

The battalion will be returning to Berlin in early August.

AFN announces schedule

Civil Rights Act shows voting is important

by Tom Jackson

Before July and its many commemorative days tumble off the calendar, it is worth noting what happened 20 years ago this month in Washington D.C.

During the final debates on the Civil Rights Act of 1964, a controversial and bitterly contested bill, a young congressman from Atlanta, Charles Weltner, stood before the House of Representatives and in a shaky but determined voice said that he had decided to change his vote from nay to yea in favor of the bill. Speaking of segregation he said the South could not be, "forever bound to another lost cause."

It was risky business for a new congressman from Georgia to turn against segregation. But as a result of Weltner's and two other congressmen's reversals, the bill passed.

When signed into law on July 2, by President Johnson, the Civil Rights Act of 1964 provided for the first time the legal right for black Americans to drink from the same water fountains, sit in the same bus, theater and restaurant seats, attend the same schools, and enjoy the same voting rights and employment opportunities as did white Americans.

In light of today's more progressive attitudes it is hard to imagine that these simple rights provokes such bitter debate and resistance a mere 20 years ago. But when the Founding Fathers wrote the Constitution 200 years ago they gave us no hard and fast rules, no guarantees, just a Constitution open to change and interpretation, a system of government, for better or worse, that would depend on the intelligence, integrity and diligence of the people. It was a gamble and it still is. They were counting on people like Charles Weltner and the people who elected him into office.

Given the relative obscurity of public officials like Weltner, it is worth noting in this election year that there are a lot of political offices up for grabs other than the president's job. With all the attention that is paid to that race few people realize how important the smaller campaigns sometimes are. How many of us can name our home district's representatives in the House, how many can name their senators, their hometown mayor or city council, let alone their representatives in state government?

Weltner was just a congressman, one unknown face out of more than 400. Yet as insignificant as a member of the House of Representatives may seem, Weltner is proof enough that just a handful of minor politicians can radically change the entire course of a nation.

Who would you blame if, when your tour of Germany is up and you return to the states, you find a strip mine in your backyard, a 12-lane freeway thundering past your grandparent's house, acid rain eating away your favorite neck of the woods, or that a job-producing company had decided not to settle where you hoped to go to work?

The president doesn't make these sort of decisions, but your mayor, your city council, your state government, congressmen and senators quite often do. And none of them will make an adverse decision such as those listed above if they know it would spell their political defeat in the next election.

It is easy to blame politicians for bending to the needs of lobbyists and big money interests but in the final analysis, it's votes and votes alone that count. With them a politician can stand off almost any kind of pressure, without them he has little recourse.

When you get your absentee ballot it will have a lot of names on it besides the presidential candidates. If you don't know who those people are it's time to find out. One of them may be another Charles Weltner. Write home, get hold of a hometown newspaper, write the political parties and demand information and lastly, vote. If you don't things back home may never be the same.

Observations

What do you feel is the most important issue in the upcoming presidential election, and why?

Patricia Adair, family member
"I think the first thing to point out is that the economy is doing well. Our diplomacy with other nations is also very important. We should get talks going with other countries."

Sp4 Kenneth C. Wilson, H & S Co., FSB
"Defense. I think we need to be stronger. Reports show our defense is a little behind."

Donna Mahlstedt, family member
"To me, the education issue is most important. I think it's been neglected too long. We need more funds for education, to get better teachers."

Capt. Brent A. Barker, H & S Co., CSB
"Bringing the balanced budget back. If we don't do it now, sooner or later our economy will be in shambles."

Safety Tips for Outdoor Grills

The American Red Cross recommends that before using your grill, read the owner's manual thoroughly and be aware of these tips:

1. Never cook indoors. Toxic fumes may accumulate and cause serious injury or death.
2. Never use the grill within 24 inches of any flammable material.
3. Do not use gasoline, alcohol or other highly volatile fluids to ignite charcoal. Use a commercially prepared firestarter.
4. When using a liquid starter to start the coals; pour it over the charcoal liberally. Allow starter to soak into the charcoal for a few minutes before you light it in several places with a match.
5. Use a good brand of charcoal and store it in a dry place. Charcoal absorbs moisture readily and will not burn well if damp.
6. Do not add lighter fluid to hot charcoals.
7. Make sure the grill is on a sturdy base to prevent it from falling over.
8. Make sure hot charcoal has cooled before disposing of it.

by Helga Haftendorn

Kunst unter den Yorckbrücken is an extraordinary art show, displayed under the bridges of Yorckstrasse. Forty-five artists from home and abroad show fantastic art, painted on 54 advertising boards displayed on Yorkstrasse in the Schöneberg district. This open-air gallery can be seen until Monday, inclusive.

If you enjoyed last Friday's late shopping in the downtown area of Taubentzen and Kurfürstendamm, don't forget the shops there will be open again until 9 p.m. tonight.

The Parkhaus in the Englischen Garten is the site of a classical concert tonight. At 8 p.m. works by Franz Schubert will be presented by Alan Marks at the piano. The Parkhaus is located in Tiergarten, and you can get there by underground to Hansaplatz. For tickets call the Kunstamt Tiergarten at 390-5234, or buy them at any downtown ticket agency.

Weekend happenings

Another Sommerkonzert will be given Saturday and Sunday at Charlottenburg Castle's Eosander Chapel. At this summer concert, works by Schütz, Bach, Sutermeister, Alain and Borris will be presented at 8 p.m. on both days. Tickets can be purchased at the Büro der Bach-Tage Berlin in Charlottenburg, on 17 Bismarckstrasse today until 6 p.m. You can also buy them at any ticket agency.

Sonntagsmusik is the title of an organ concert that will be presented at the Kaiser-Friedrich-Gedächtnis-Kirche on Sunday. On the program are works by Johann Sebastian Bach with curtain time at 5 p.m. The church is located on 20-22 Händelallee, and you can get there by underground to Hansaplatz. Admission to this Sunday music is DM8.

Another Sommerkonzert is offered on Sunday. Works by Scarlatti, Johann Sebastian Bach and others will be presented at the Church at Lietzensee, located on 4-6 Herbartstrasse. The concert begins at 5 p.m., and DM8 tickets can be purchased at the door.

Performances with and about music offers the Akademie der Künste on Saturday. Elvire, the Hornquartett Zeilbeck, Julius, Eleonore Matocza, Pamela Straube and Thomas Wegel will present their works in acoustic/visual blocs of about 10 minutes, each. The Academy of Arts is located on 10 Hanseatenweg in Tiergarten. Take the underground to Hansaplatz, or buses 16 and 23. For additional information, call the academy at 391-1031.

On Saturday, children will perform for children one more time on Breitscheidplatz (memorial church). This is the last of two theater performances presented for eight- to 12-year-olds. The program begins at 2 p.m., and you can take the underground to Zoologischer Garten.

Like to watch the Berliner Seifenkisten Derby? The Berliner Soapbox Derby will be conducted on Saturday and Sunday on Mehringdamm in the Kreuzberg district. German championships begin at 10 a.m. on both days. Take the underground to Mehringdamm.

A Kunstmarkt will be held in front of the Kleinen Orangerie at Charlottenburg Castle this weekend. On Saturday and Sunday this art market offers paintings, ceramics, graphics, toys and more from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. There will also be a music and theater program going on during the opening hours of the art market. Take buses 9, 21, 54, 62, 74 or 87.

If you happen to be in the vicinity of Manteuffelstrasse, corner of Oranienstrasse on Saturday, you might want to join in a Strassenfest, going on there. No time was given, but the afternoon might be a good guess.

Folk and Blues are offered at the Statthaus Boecklerpark on Sunday. The Statthaus is located on 1 Prinzenstrasse and the program begins at 3 p.m. in the Statthaus garden.

Please note, that for some time to come, there will be no performances given at the Theater des Westens. The theater is closed for renovation which will be going on for several months.

There will be more outdoor happenings going on at all places around Kurfürstendamm this weekend. Music groups will be playing, and authors will be reading from their works at Wittenberg-, Breitscheidplatz, Los-Angeles-, Joachimstaler and Adenauer Platz. This open-air activity begins at different times in the afternoons on Saturday and Sunday.

During the week

Circus Roncalli has extended his stay here until Aug. 26, for you to enjoy two performances daily on Masurenallee. Shows begin at 3 and 7:30 p.m. As of Aug. 6, the second show starts at 8 p.m., thus giving all those Berliners who are working late, a chance to come to the evening performance. Tickets can be purchased daily from 10 a.m. at the circus, or you can have them reserved by calling 301-9091. Take the underground to Theodor-Heuss-Platz, or buses 4, 92 and 94.

Empire International, the African and Caribbean Cultural Forum, is located on Hauptstrasse 30. Every Tuesday its Reggae Time, with no admission charged. The fun begins at 9 p.m., and the forum is open daily, except on Monday, from 9 p.m. For the daily program, call 784-8565. Take the underground to Eisenacherstrasse.

The Chamber Ensemble of the North Carolina School of Arts Orchestra presents a Sommerkonzert at the Charlottenburg Castle's Eichengalerie on Wednesday. On the program are works by David Moritz Michael, Beethoven, Janacek, Elliot Carter and Hindemith. Curtain time is 8 p.m. for this summer concert. Tickets can be purchased at the Kunstamt, located on Heerstrasse 12, at ticket agencies, or at the door. Take buses 9, 21, 54, 62, 74 or 87.

On Thursday, another concert will be presented at Charlottenburg Castle. It's a chamber concert with works by Michael Haydn, Britten, Reger and Smetana, beginning at 8 p.m. at the Eichengalerie.

In connection with the Berliner Sommernachtstraum Program, the Tempodrom offers Cirque de Barbarie — a Ladies Circus from Paris. This show will run from Wednesday until Sept. 2. Daily performances begin at 9 p.m., except on Monday. The Tempodrom has set up its tent at the Congress Hall, in the Tiergarten district.

Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber's rock opera, Jesus Christ Superstar, is coming to the Funkturm Exhibition Grounds' Messehalle 1. From Sept. 6, there will be daily performances, beginning at 8 p.m., except on Mondays. Shows are presented in English and German, alternating. Advance ticket sale has begun at downtown ticket agencies. For your ticket reservation, call 312-1022 or 312-5015.

Hit's A GoGo is the title of a moonlight dance party leaving on Wednesday and Thursday from Schlossbrücke, located on Charlottenburg Ufer. The cruiser departs from Schlossbrücke at 8:30 p.m., and tickets can be purchased aboard.

Spain...

Story and photos by Tom Jackson

For weeks on end, a miserable grey drizzle had beat against the windowpanes. Everywhere in Berlin, pedestrians tucked tightly into their coats, their heads bowed, hands in pockets. Low, dark clouds scudded past treetops and buildings, soaking everything with a damp chill.

It was not December but June and summer had failed to show. With a 10-day leave fast approaching, a limited budget and no end in sight to the dreary weather, there was only one choice.

Spain.

Hot, bright sunlight, azure skies and sparkling seas. The land of rugged mountains, whitewashed stucco, of Piccaso, Goya and Miro, the bullfight, El Cid's death charge across the dusty plains and don Quixote, the incurable romantic, tilting at windmills.

The package tour was offered by American Express-six overnights in a hotel on the Costa Brava, the "wild coast," along the northern edge of the Spanish Mediterranean. Transportation to and from Frankfurt and three meals a day was included for DM480 each.

We were in search of summer, my wife and I, even if it meant a 16-hour bus ride from Frankfurt, through France and into Spain. We would get our sun and, I hoped, a taste of Iberian art and culture, whatever the cost.

After a night on the duty train and chilly day spent in Frankfurt we boarded the tour bus outside the Hauptbahnhof about 6 p.m. and within minutes were heading south.

In the grand and lighthearted German tradition, our tour guide, a gregarious, bespeckled and middle-age gentleman, began with a welcoming speech, an introductory promo pitch, a little comedy and some facts and figures. To avoid any garbling of his German name, he insisted we call him Bill.

Our group was an assortment of young military couples, two or three families, a few single service members and a flock of teenagers. To our surprise we discovered that there were no toilets on the bus. But beer and other refreshments were available and the combination of beer, teenagers and a 16-hour bus trip made for frequent stops.

A 16-hour overnight bus ride is not something you would want to do often. What saved it in this case was the following day's views of the windswept landscape of southeastern France through Lyons, Nimes, Montpellier, and Narbonne.

Ancient ruins

Centuries of civilization and agriculture have studded this rocky, often mountainous region with orchards, vineyards and tall windbreaks that swirl and terrace as far as the eye can see around hills and past ancient Roman fortifications. Crumbling ruins, unmolested by renovation or the bulldozers blade often formed the nucleus of each village. There were people living alongside these ruins, in villages founded by the Romans, and used by the Visigoths and the medieval knights of legend.

The sight of an occasional nuclear power plant, their giant cooling towers often standing just across a river or valley from a 14th century village, only added to the timeless quality of the landscape.

We reached the Spanish border just past noon on the day after we left Frankfurt. Winding our way through one of the ten mountain passes in the Pyrenees we began our descent towards

I could hardly wait to step into this sunlit, quiet, seaside paradise. I was primed, well-read and ready for art, high culture and ancient civilization.

Spain at last

A little past three, the bus finally stopped and we stepped out into the streets of Lloret del Mar and into a riot of madness, noise and color. This was a party town, geared up for unabashed tourist gimcrackery and regalia, built for the absorption of massive waves of pale, sun-seaking, primarily young and working class tourists from northern Europe. A disco-delux, filled to capacity with bleary-eyed Brits singing soccer anthems, tall fast talking Danes, lithe and blonde young women from Scandinavia, and sun-seekers of every stripe and color.

At any one time, six different languages were being spoken in the cafe and shop crowded streets of Lloret. But you had to listen hard and speak loud to be heard over the continual din of the rental scooters and the horn tapping trucks and autos that tried to squeeze their way through the narrow streets. Firecrackers exploded intermittently throughout town at all hours of the day and night. Everywhere, densely clustered and hastily built hotels erupted skyward.

It was a constant but harmless sort of chaos, unnerving at first. But before long our resistance caved in and we found ourselves laughing at the madness.

A tour to the bullfights in Barcelona was offered on the afternoon of our arrival. Worn out and stiff from the long ride down however, we opted to stay back, stretch out and relax. Later reports showed that the matadors won a clean

The Florida Park

Our hotel, the "Florida Park," was spare but adequate. The room included a private bath with occasional shortages of hot water and a balcony. The food however, was disappointing. The package tour price included the cost of meals, but breakfast was lean; a boiled egg, a hard roll with butter and jam, a small slice of meat and coffee. Lunch and dinner were more substantial but relied too much on massive doses of potatoes. The main entrees lacked any excitement or culinary finesse whatsoever. We found ourselves snacking quite often in town.

Determined in my quest for art and Spanish culture we signed up for two of the out-of-city tours, Barcelona and Montserrat.

The trip to Barcelona proved to be a disaster of too much to see and too little time to see it in. After needlessly wasting time on a morning coffee break, we spun through the 13th century Gothic Cathedral of Barcelona in a half hour, ducked into a shop along Las Ramblas, the city's main promenade, for souvenir shopping, wasted more time on a quick boat tour of the harbour and its industrial splendors and blasted past the Joan Miro Museum, without so much as a backward glance, towards the Spanish Village.

One could have easily spent half a day in the Spanish Village—a collection of 20 or so buildings representing each period of Spanish architecture and each building housing a working craftsman plying his trade. But we got just 30 minutes.

After a miserable lunch we circled around Antonio Gaudi's bizarre Church of the Holy Family — 12 tapering spires, 107 meters high, festooned with all sorts of icons, lizards, gargoyles and arcana. The remainder of the afternoon was designated as free time for shopping. Instead we relaxed, for the first time all day, over drinks and sweets on a rooftop restaurant overlooking the city. We can say that we saw Barcelona, but at that pace it was pretty much a blur, a tour hardly worthy of that city's stature and history.

Mountain retreat

The next day we set out by bus again for the sawtoothed mountain of Montserrat and the champagne cellars of the Codorniu family. This tour was better paced with more than three hours to roam about the monastery at Montserrat and take in its breathtaking views. We had a surprisingly good lunch and then traveled to the champagne cellars for a guided tour of the six miles of bricked in caves where the wine is stored to age. The grounds outside were lavish and blooming with trellised roses. Inside, the workers were lively and pleasant. The tour was relaxed, educational and thoroughly enjoyable.

Sun, surf and sand

The remainder of our days were spent on the beach or strolling the crowded, colorful streets. The beach at Lloret is wide and long and big enough to handle the crowds. The sand was a bit rough but the water was a sparkling delight: It was clearer than the Atlantic, less salty than the Pacific, and cold, but not impossibly so.

We attended a night time Flamenco show and despite the departure from the traditional dance (a dying art unfortunately) a variety of acts and all the champagne you could drink included in the cover charge made it a worthwhile venture.

Although hazy at times, the sun in Lloret was strong and hot every day except one. And despite the carnival atmosphere, the days passed with a slow relaxed tempo. There was time to explore and swim, bask in the sun, read and just goof off.

Sunlight and warmth we found, even if this particular tour offered little in the way of art or Spanish culture.

But what was most memorable about Spain was the people. Ruled for centuries by one iron-fisted dictator or another, they have in only the last nine years, begun to enjoy the freedoms of democracy and self-government. Spain's equivalent to the American Revolution occurred nonviolently in 1975 with the death of the dictator Generalissimo Francisco Franco. The new monarch, King Juan Carlos began his rule with an ambitious plan for gradual democratization and modernization. These changes have not been easy for a country so used to totalitarian rule, but Juan Carlos has held fast. Spanish democracy, once thought to be impossible, is working.

And you can see it everywhere you look. New construction is going up. Poverty, however slowly, is abating. Spain is on the verge of joining the European Common Market. The newspapers and magazines are free to criticize the government; the people free to elect their own politicians. There is an infectious feeling of lightheartedness in the air, a willingness to tackle the many problems of maintaining a democracy. The people are friendly, cordial, and upbeat. And quite often you will find them singing, just anywhere, almost any time of day, the same simple refrain from a popular national song, "Que viva Espana."

'New Stevie Wonder' warms chilled fans

by Paul White

It was Stevie Wonder's type of crowd that gathered together July 18 at the Waldbühne—men, women, boys and girls of all ages and several nationalities. And despite a persistent drizzle and the usual chill of a summer evening in Berlin, the crowd buzzed in anticipation. They had come for a dose of Stevie Wonder's magical blend of charisma, showmanship, and some of the most infectious music of the past 20 years. And nearly three hours later, they had not been disappointed.

Because after Stevie Wonder had finished thrilling the audience with his unique brand of foot-stomping "jams," it became clear that Stevie Wonder had once again lived up to his name.

Wonder started his show by asking the crowd if they'd like to hear "the new Stevie Wonder." With the crowd roaring its approval, Wonder kicked in to "I'm Walking the Floor Over You," a country-western style rocker. From there he moved into a soulful rendition of "Nobody Loves Me," another new tune. Wonder showed his versatility here as he glided effortlessly through this blues song.

The next song, "Alfie," gave Wonderlove vocalist Susie Green the chance to display her outstanding range. With Wonder accompanying her on piano, Greene's interpretation of the Burt Bacharach classic brought a thunderous ovation from the approximately 10,000 fans.

The pace picked up as Wonder launched into "All I Do," a spicy number from his 1982 "Hotter Than July" album. The Wonderlove band really shined on this cut as the song evolved into jazz-fusion. But the focus remained on Stevie as he energetically bounced from keyboards to synthesizer to piano, never missing a beat.

By this time everyone was up out of their seat, and it wasn't because the seats were wet. Stevie Wonder was throwing a party at the Waldbühne, and the crowd was partying right along with him.

Wonder let his music do the talking at the Waldbühne. There was no fancy stage show and there were no breakdancers. But with Wonder, the music's the thing. He was in good form and his talented band Wonderlove handled the music with precision.

Wonder then slowed things down by playing a few of his most popular ballads, all of which were well received. He topped off this segment of his show with the beautiful "Ribbon In The Sky" from "Hotter Than July", featuring a dynamite acoustic guitar solo by Wonderlove's Ben Bridges.

One of the highlights of the evening came when Wonder performed his first big hit, "Fingertips Pt. 2" in the same high-pitched voice he used to record the song in 1962. He followed this with more of his early hits, including "Uptight," "For One in My Life," "My Cherie Amour," and "Signed, Sealed, Delivered."

In the early 70s Wonder started to combine rhythms with lyrics that contained a social message. The result was "Higher Ground," "You Haven't Done Nothing," and "Living For the City," three rock and soul tunes with hard-edged lyrics. He performed these songs with tremendous vitality, bouncing up and down happily as his trademark braids swayed to and fro.

The aisles were filled with dancing fans by now, and Wonder was in complete control. He bombarded the crowd with hit after hit, giving no speeches and taking no breaks. Wonder merely strung his collage of hit songs together to create a musical feast.

Sensing the upbeat mood of his audience, Wonder immediately shifted into overdrive. He gave the crowd another taste of some new material with "Go Home," a funk-spiced tune, and "Upset Stomach," some good old-fashioned rhythm and blues. Next came three songs from his critically acclaimed "Songs In the Key of Life" album, including "Isn't She Lovely," with Wonder sparkling on his harmonica. The crowd was having a rockin' good time; but amazingly, Stevie Wonder appeared to be having the best time of all.

With the show coming to a close, Wonder once again turned up the tempo. He leaped into an energetic rendition of "Superstition," giving Wonderlove yet another opportunity to really "get down."

Wonder performed his next song, "Do I Do," without his numerous keyboards. With Wonderlove handling all the instruments, Wonder stood center stage and belted out the tune while literally "rocking his body down to the ground."

On the studio version of "Do I Do," jazz great Dizzy Gillespie enhances the song with a dazzling trumpet solo. Gillespie wasn't present at the concert, but it was hard to find fault with the job Larry Gibbons did on the same part.

Wonder concluded his show with the rousing "Happy Birthday," his appeal to make Martin Luther King's birthday a national holiday. Wonder was still standing center stage and his voice was as strong as it had been at the show's outset. Without being coerced, the crowd joined in and turned the event into one big singalong.

Stevland Morris was dubbed "Stevie Wonder" when he joined Motown Records in 1962. Twenty-two years later, he showed 10,000 die-hard fans at the Waldbühne why he was given that name.

Weight lifting: Rest important for iron pumping progress

by Mike Warren

When that famous cartoon character, "Popeye," wants to pump up his muscles in a hurry, he pops open a can of spinach and downs it in a flash. When some amateur weight lifters want to accomplish the same thing, they go to the gym and lift weights every day.

In reality, both methods are about equally as effective.

A common mistake made by novice lifters, according to Michael A. Jett, a local weight lifting expert, is to work out every day. "Beginners sometimes have the misconception that muscles are growing when they are lifting," says Jett, who has been lifting seriously for four years. "However, it is the day of rest when muscle growth actually occurs."

The increased blood flow through muscles and the stress placed on them when lifting weights tears muscle tissue slightly, Jett says. When the muscle tissue mends on the day of rest, it will mend slightly larger, and this imperceptible change increases muscle size and strength, according to Jett.

"I see some people going to the gym every day to lift, and they wonder why they never get bigger," he says. "They don't realize that they are just tearing their muscles down every day."

Another common myth about weight lifting is that it causes one to become "muscle bound," which means a loss of flexibility and speed. "In fact, the opposite is nearly true," said Dr. Jack R. Leighton in his book, "Progressive Weight Training."

"After engaging in a program of progressive weight training, the individual will find movement at joints less restricted than before," Leighton added. Leighton cited studies which indicate the range of joint movement required for weight training usually exceeds the accustomed range of joints, hence, increased flexibility.

Some of the positive results from a properly conducted weight training program include increased strength, endurance, balance, and power, all of which contribute to better physical fitness, health and athletic achievement, said Leighton. Added to this list are self-discipline, a release for tension and "feeling good about yourself," says Jett.

Jett recommends the following workout routine be followed three times a week (with a least one day of rest in between to allow muscles to rest) for beginning weight lifters:

- Warm-up exercises, such as stretching exercises, push-ups, and a half-mile run.
- Bench press. The bench press builds strength in the ## Jumbo Jett!

Michael A. Jett goes through his weight lifting routine at the Andrews Gym weight room. Jett, who has been lifting seriously for four years, says self-discipline, a release for tension, and "feeling good about yourself" are among the advantages of the sport.

chest, triceps, and the front of the shoulders. Attention should be given in all exercises to proper form. The proper form for the bench press: the hands are placed about two to three inches wider than the shoulders, and the forearms should be lowered easily, not "bounced" off the chest.

Jett says for this and all weight lifting exercises for beginners, one should experiment to find the correct weight to lift. "Find a weight you can lift for three sets of 10 repetitions, resting one to two minutes between sets. Add five pounds to that until you can do two sets of ten repetitions, but can only do about six repetitions on the final set. When you work up to three sets of 10 repetitions, add another five pounds."

Safety precautions are also important, Jett stresses. He says it's a good idea to have a "spotter" standing by to help the lifter in case he can't handle the weight. Also, a weight lifting belt should be worn to ease back strain.

• Overhead press. The overhead, or "military" press builds shoulder muscles. The exercise is done while standing, lifting the barbell overhead, then down, stopping either at the top of the chest or behind the neck.

A moderate pace should be used with the overhead press, according to Jett. Weight should be eased down, so that tension is kept on muscles at all times. Beginners should pay strict attention to keeping an erect posture—it is easy to injure the shoulders and back if one does not maintain correct posture.

• Standing barbell curl. This exercise primarily builds the biceps, and also increases the strength of forearms. Again, it is important to keep the body as straight as possible to avoid swaying. Upper arms should be kept as still as possible, and close to the sides.

• Standing tricep extension. This exercise benefits the back of the upper arms. The barbell rests behind the neck with elbows pointing up. Use the forearms to extend the weight over the head. Again, the body should be kept as straight as possible, and the weight should be eased up and down, not "slung."

• Bent-over row. The upper back and triceps are the muscles benefited by this exercise. The back is bent in a 10 o'clock position, with feet spread at shoulder-width. With arms extended, pick the barbell up from the floor, maintaining the 10 o'clock angle. The weight should then be raised and lowered (but not to the ground).

• Squat. The squat develops thigh muscles. The feet should be placed slightly wider than shoulder-width. The barbell will be on a rack for this exercise. Bend slightly to get under the weight, then squat until thighs are parallel to the ground. Be careful not to lower the thighs farther, to avoid possible knee injury, and don't try to lift more than you can handle on this exercise.

• Sit-ups. These develop abdominal muscles, and beginning weight lifters should start out with three sets of 15 repetitions.

Weight lifting is not an aerobic exercise, although there is some cardio-vascular benefit because of increased blood flow, according to Jett. He says any weight lifting program should be accompanied by some form of aerobic exercise, such as running, swimming or bicycling.

Jett recommends that serious beginners obtain a book on beginning weight lifting.

Wilbert Montgomery?

Running back Mario Hannrall of the Berlin Eagles charges through a hole in the line created by team mate Alexius Tank, and scores a touchdown against the Düsseldorf Panthers, in German American-Football League action Sunday at Volkspark Rehberge stadium. Düsseldorf came back from a 21-10 deficit to beat Berlin 39-21 in the second to last regular season game for both teams. A record crowd of approximately 3,500 fans were on hand to see the action Play-offs start Sept. 1, but locations have not been announced yet.

What's happening

Shape-up classes

MSAD is offering the following physical fitness classes:

Lunchtime aerobics — taught by Carrie Ekins in the All American Conference Room from 11:45 a.m. to 12:45 p.m., Mondays and Wednesdays. The cost for six lessons is $12. Classes are currently in session.

Aerobics in Dueppel — Also taught by Carrie Ekins, every Tuesday and Thursday, in the basement of building 1820 on Charles H. King Strasse. The cost is $12 for six classes. Classes start Aug. 7.

Women's body sculpture class — Every Tuesday and Thursday at the Women's Fitness Center at the Berlin Brigade Sports Center. Classes will run from 3:30 p.m. The cost is $16 for eight lessons.

Payment must be made in advance for all three classes, and may be made at the All American Community Center at McNair Barracks, after 1 p.m.

For more information call extension 3254, after 1 p.m.

Change to Women's track

MSAD has announced that USAB active duty women are urgently needed to compete for the USAB track and field team. Practice takes place daily from 6:30 to 9 a.m. at Yankee Stadium. Interested women should contact Don Carter, MSAD sports director, at 6768 as soon as possible.

Golf tourey

A unique Golf Tournament is being sponsored by Dunhill, to be played between uniformed members of the British Forces North-West Europe and United States Forces North-West Europe, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Aug. 7 and 8.

The format of the competition is based on the successful Ryder Cup played between America and Europe, consisting of foursome, fourball and singles matchplay.

Sport Stumpers answers (from last week)

1. Easy question. Danny Ainge is the correct answer.
2. George Brett.
3. Ron Reed.
4. False; he won the title in 1969.

Triple!

287th MP pitcher Bernie Keefer smacks a triple in the fourth inning of the USAB slow-pitch softball championship game, Sunday at Andrews field. Keefer's hit drove in Greg Culpepper, but the MP's lost the game to H & S Co., FSB, 13-7.

Rios going to tennistrials

David Rios of Co. A, Field Station Berlin, qualified Sunday for the all-Army tennis trials, and will travel to Forst Eustis, Va. Aug. 1 to participate in the Army tennis camp.

Rios advanced to the final four in the USAREUR tennis tourney, held July 19-22 in Garmisch, before he was defeated by Fred Benjamina 6-2, 6-3, but he qualified to make the trip to Virginia by making the top four.

"Benjamina has played in the USAREUR finals before," said Rios. "He's tough. I had trouble with his serve — it was jumping all over the place." Rios said Benjamina uses a spin on his serves called an "American Twist," and added "70 percent of his game is his serve."

H & S, FSB takes USAB tourney

by Mike Warren

George Moore isn't a bat boy, but he did a lot of cleaning up after other batters July 20 at Andrews field.

Moore, the clean-up hitter for Headquarters and Service Company, Field Station Berlin, blasted a pair of homers and drove in five runs, to lead his team to a 13-7 victory against the 287th Military Police Company, to capture the U.S. Army Berlin Softball Tournament.

The same two teams met in for the championship the Firecracker Tourney July 2, and the MPs prevailed 7-6.

This time, FSB overpowered the MPs, but not until the final inning. The MPs spent the first six innings proving they weren't about to give in to FSB's talented team.

FSB scored first, in the top of the first inning. With one out Johnny Hoskins tripled. He scored on a sacrifice fly to Oswaldo Ortiz.

FSB added to their lead with a pair of runs in the second. Alderman Dover singled to start the inning and Jerome Wiggins followed with a double. Gayle Cox knocked in both base runners with a double, and it was 3-0.

The MPs got on the board in the bottom of the second when Cuz Flynn opened the inning with a home run.

In the top of the third, Moore belted a two-run homer to give FSB a 5-1 lead, and they made it 6-1 in the fourth when Wiggins tripled and scored on a sacrifice fly by Cox.

The MPs started a comeback effort in the bottom of the fourth. Greg Culpepper drew a one-out walk and Bernie Keefer's triple scored him.

The MPs closed the gap to 6-5 with three more runs in the fifth. Rickey Bell and Walter Watson singled and Les Anderson lined a shot on the gap in left field for a triple. Terry Gerhardtstein's infield out produced two runs for FSB in the top of the sixth, but the MPs came back in the bottom half of the inning with a pair of runs on Ed Anderson's two-run home run.

FSB finally blew the game open in the top of the seventh. Mervin Thomas walked and came home on a single by Carney, followed by an error by Flynn. Hoskins singled to score Carney. After Ortiz also smacked a base hit, Moore followed with his second homer, a three-run shot, to close out the game's scoring.

The MPs went down in order in the bottom of the inning, with Gerhardtstein lining out sharply to Dover to end the game.

FSB coach Daryl Cody and the FSB players whooped it up after the game. "This is it!" said Cody exuberantly. "This is what we've been longing for."
