Reagan condemns Wall, cites GIs

President's visit includes Brandenburg Gate address, Tempelhof party for Berlin

Americans here were still winding down earlier this week from President Ronald Reagan's June 12 visit to the divided city.

During a visit that lasted about five hours, Reagan managed to address much of the American community at his two main appearances, a foreign policy address at the Brandenburg Gate, and at the birthday party for Berlin Reagan hosted at Tempelhof Central Airport's B Halle.

The president and first lady Nancy Reagan arrived at TCA at 11:45 a.m. There the president joined U.S. Commander, Berlin, Maj. Gen. John Mitchell and Berlin Brigade Commander, Brig. Gen. Jack Woodall. The trio reviewed a special allied honor guard before the president left for his visit to downtown Berlin.

Reagan first visited Bellevue Palace, where he met with German Chancellor Helmut Kohl. From there the American president went to the Reichstag, where he honored a group that came to be known as the "heroes of Berlin."

From the Reichstag Reagan made the short trip along the Wall to the special stand set up near where Strasse des 17. Juni meets the Berlin Wall, just yards away from the historic Brandenburg Gate.

Brandenburg address

Standing in front of a bullet-proof transparent shield that provided a view to the graffiti-riddled Wall and the East beyond, Reagan delivered a forceful 20-minute speech in which he dared General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev to bring down the barriers that separate Eastern and Western Europe.

"General Secretary Gorbachev, if you seek peace--if you seek prosperity for the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe--if you seek liberalization: Come here, to this gate.

"Mr. Gorbachev, open this gate.

"Mr. Gorbachev . . . Mr. Gorbachev, tear down this wall."

During the speech, which was interrupted several times by cheers from the flag-waving crowd, Reagan went on to propose, "summer youth exchanges, cultural events and other programs for young Berliners from the East" as part of a plan to "seek a still fuller, richer life for the Berlin of the future."

Reagan also proposed expanding air access to the city, and said he looks to the day when, "West Berlin can become one of the chief aviation hubs in all Central Europe."

The president's final proposal was a call for a jointly hosted Olympic games to be held in both parts of the city.

Tempelhof party

After finishing his speech and leaving the crowd, estimated by police to be 15,000-20,000 strong, Reagan returned to Tempelhof Central Airport where he spoke briefly to another flag-waving throng at the party in honor of Berlin's 750th anniversary. (See related story page 4.)

During his speech at the B Halle, Reagan picked out the graduating classes of Berlin American High School and John F. Kennedy School to praise for their achievement. Reagan also brought out a four tier birthday cake for the city's anniversary and presided over a mass balloon drop.

Reagan also thanked the city's 14,000 American servicemembers, government employees and family members and went on to assure Berliners that American troops, "will be here as long as they are needed by the city of Berlin."

BIG TIME

Getting there is none of the fun, getting home is

by Joe Ferrare
Editor

One week ago today I finally hit the Big Time. You could tell: I wore a tie (though I still had to have my wife tie it for me).

I hit the Big Time the way a mini-marshmallow hits a M-1 tank. I wore out the Big Time's knuckles with my face. I made the Big Time use up half its yearly allotment of bone-crushing kicks in one day.

And a good time was had by all.

The Big Time I'm speaking of was the White House Press Corps. After finagling, conniving and wheedling of long duration, my boss secured for me a spot in the White House Press Pool. I was going to travel with the Big Boys. In my mind this not only legitimized my role as an Army journalist at the Big Event, but it guaranteed me access to the best shots because our current president is widely praised for knowing how to use the media.

Use me, I prayed. Make me make you look good.

The use I got wasn't the use I had in mind.

First, even though I arrived at 6 a.m. for an 11 a.m. bus ride, I didn't get the world's best spot, nor did I get to go to all the events on the president's schedule. I got . . . well, I got the Bob Uecker seats of the White House Press Pool.

But even a few hours in the Bob Uecker seats can be instructive. For instance, I learned that the Big Boys (and the Big Girls, too) are normal folks. Folks, who, believe it or not, have a lot more in common with GIs than with your average American.

Before you start figuring out my neck size, let me explain.

The journalists I was exposed to acted for all the world like GIs out in the field. Strange situation. Unrealistic demands. No time alternating with too much time, each when it could do the most damage. People herding them around, putting completely incomprehensible restrictions on them.

So, not unlike GIs in the field, they came up with their own answers—even if they weren't in the book, the appendix or the new revised edition.

But what was most telling was when we got to the Reichstag and they saw the Wall for the first time. It got kind of quiet. Experienced eyes taking in the unimaginable, a 13 foot, graffiti-marred wall squatting where there should have been a street.

"Is that The Wall?"

"Yeah." (Nobody was unsophisticated enough to say "Gosh," but you could feel it forming on a couple dozen camera-ready lips.)

"Let's just get out and tear it down while we're waiting."

"Yeah, then Ronnie won't have anything to talk about when he gets here."

I'll probably be banned from the White House Press Pool when next they come, and you'll never hear any of them admit it, but I got the definite feeling that most there would have taken pick in hand and set to work on the Wall, much as many of us here get the urge to do now and again.

But then the bus stopped, the press stands were empty and the rush for the best spots was on. Talk of camera angles, satellite hooks-ups and f-stops took over. They had a job to do, and the Wall became a backdrop, much as it is for the Berliners and Americans who continue to live with it long after the White House Press Pool and the president have gone.

Behind the scenes: more sweat, less pomp

Blowing up balloons was admission price for those who wanted to contribute, see Reagan

Among the behind-the-scenes workers for President Ronald Reagan's June 12 visit were hundreds of volunteers from the Berlin American community.

More than 700 people volunteered to stuff envelopes, blow up balloons, entertain, prepare and serve food and clean up afterward, according to Installation Volunteer Coordinator Mary Savely.

"They were all wonderful. No one complained about their tasks or if they were reassigned," Savely said.

The majority of the volunteers were at Tempelhof Central Airport's B Halle where a birthday party was given for Berlin's 750th anniversary.

About four hours before the visit, volunteers began to prepare food while others started the entertainment.

"All of the volunteers were super. Without them we could never have done this," Karen Babineau said. Babineau was the coordinator of the 250 entertainers performing throughout the day.

Berlin American groups on the entertainment agenda included the Faith Gospel Choir, the Mormon Children's Choir, "American Forte," the Berlin American High School Band and "Country U.S.A." Others who performed included Deidre Fitzpatrick, John Kump, Mike Rivera, Brett Swanson and Charity Greene.

"It was a great honor to perform in front of the president, especially since this is Ronnie's last term in office and the 750th anniversary of Berlin," Fitzpatrick said.

"We wanted to perform primarily because we are mission-minded," said Faith Gospel Director Johnetta Page. "We're Christ-centered and use every opportunity to witness to the community at large about ourselves."

"I volunteered because I'd never get a chance to see him in real life otherwise, and this is it," Leigh Johnson, Mormon Children's Choir member, said.

Those in B Halle were able to see the president's TCA arrival as well as his Brandenburg Gate speech on a wide television screen in one corner of the hall.

Food was served to the volunteers and others such as the Army and Air Force public affairs teams and members of the press before the guests arrived. The food, prepared and served by volunteers, was donated by Burger King and the Berlin Club System, with drinks donated by several beverage manufacturers.

"I volunteered because I'm new to the community and this gave me a chance to meet other people who were also volunteering," Melanie French said.

All activity stopped during Reagan's 30-minute visit so that the volunteers would also have a chance to see the president.

"I'm glad that it worked out so we could watch. We weren't cut off from any of the important activities," Amy Wolf said.

"This was a once-in-a-lifetime chance. If you're not a Washington D.C. resident, then the chances are slim you'll ever see the president," Betty Bailey said.

"Seeing President Reagan reminds me of our importance and renews the feeling of why we're here, and the world importance of Berlin," Debbie Bonsack said.

After the president left, but while the party was still going on, Boy Scout and Girl Scout members began gathering plates, cups and other trash.

"I'm glad I volunteered because I was able to see the president, and I was happy to help with the celebration," BAHS seventh grader Elizabeth Satz said. Satz is a member of Girl Scout Troop 402.

"A lot of people let this prime opportunity to be involved slip away. The ones who did volunteer can be proud of it, and the command is proud of them," Assistant Chief of Staff, G-1/DPCA, Lt. Col. Mike Spinello said.

Medics wrap up field competition

The second Berlin Brigade Medical Competition was held at the McNair Barracks confidence course Tuesday. The competition tested medical personnel in the Berlin Brigade and the U.S. Army Hospital, Berlin.

Awards were given for the best overall individual and platoon competitors, winning the individual competition was Sgt. John C. Wells, Headquarters Company, 4th Battalion. In second place was SP4 Ralph B. Kelly, Combat Support Company, Combat Support Battalion. In third place was Sgt. Mark J. Bundy, Headquarters Company, 6th Bn. The team from the Combat Support Battalion won the platoon level competition.

"The individual competition was very close. There were no more than 10 points between the winners, and the platoon competitions were the same. It went down to the last events," SP4 Gene Jackson, patient administration specialist at the U.S. Army Hospital, Berlin, said.

"This was set up for two reasons," 1st Lt. Robert Reeder, brigade medical operations officer said. "One, to prepare for the Expert Field Medical Badge competition; a lot of the events will be on the EFMB test. The second reason was for the esprit de corps and to raise morale. To say that this is our best medic and this is our best platoon."

"When the units have organization days, the medics are tasked to provide medical support, so they don't get to take part in the events. This gives them a chance to take part," Reeder said.

The participants started the competition with a 50 question written test, and those who made the top 25 percent of the scores went on to represent their battalion in the individual competition.

One of the events for the individual competitors was first aid survival. The winner had to perform first aid for three patients while under fire from a sniper. Each patient had one wound to treat, and the members were wearing the Multi-Integrated Laser Engagement System. They were graded on proper treatment of the injuries, the time taken to complete the first aid and the number of times their MILES gear went off.

One of the events for the platoon competition was the litter relay. Each platoon fielded 16 men for the relay. Four men from each team took a litter with a patient and carried it for 50 meters and then returned. All four of the squads had to carry the litter, and the 16 man team with the best time won the event.

Tax ruling favors GI-homeowner

Washington (ARNEWS)—Soldiers who receive tax-free housing allowances will be permitted to deduct mortgage interest and property taxes on their homes, according to a recent Internal Revenue Service ruling. Soldiers are eligible to receive tax-free housing allowances if they do not reside on military installations.

The ruling is based on provisions in the Tax Reform

Act of 1986 and applies to future years as well as past years. Mortgage interest and property taxes can be claimed only if the taxpayer itemizes the deduction on the 1040 long form.

The IRS advises members of the uniformed services to file an amended return—form 1040X—if mortgage interest or property taxes were not claimed on a tax return filed for a prior year and claiming them would mean less tax. An amended return must generally be filed within three years from the date the taxpayer's return was filed or two years from when the tax was paid, whichever is later.

Free Father's Day MARS phone calls

Worms, Germany—Soldiers, family members and authorized civilian personnel stationed overseas may make free phone calls to relatives and friends in the continental United States and Hawaii on Father's Day Sunday, thanks to the Military Affiliate Radio System and GTE Sprint.

On major holidays, Sprint donates free access to its system to MARS so calls can be made through the Army MARS system. Calls that are placed via overseas MARS operators to selected MARS phone patch operators throughout the United States. The calls are then forwarded free of charge via Sprint to the recipient.

The requirement to link with the nearest phone patch operator of the party being called is waived during the period the free service is available. Originating stations are authorized contact with any phone patch operators, regardless of their location.

The only requirement for the free service is that the person called must be in a location serviced by Sprint.

Local MARS stations are open for transmitting messages for Father's Day, Mother's Day, Independence Day, Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's Day.

Brigade Review set for June 26

Soldiers of the year will be recognized, and then the units will pass in review. Following the unit pass in review, the Drill Team will conduct a precision drill performance. When the Drill Team moves off, the vehicles will pass in review, and a helicopter flyover will take place.

Buses for the ceremony will drop off and pick up spectators at the corner of Goerzallee and 4 Juli Platz. After the ceremony, the buses will return spectators to all pick up points. Each bus will display a sign on the windshield stating their destination.

FSB retakes Army title

Maintenance division soldiers claim Army award again

Field Station Berlin recently captured its second Army Chief of Staff Award for Maintenance Excellence in three years. The win makes the unit the only one in its category to earn the prestigious award twice in the seven year history of the competition.

The award is presented annually in recognition of outstanding maintenance programs at the unit level. Units compete based on the category and amount of maintenance performed. Field Station Berlin was selected the best in the Table of Distribution and Allowances Heavy Category.

The standards and selection criteria are not only very high, the competitors are judged for depth and sustainability because of the 12-month duration of the evaluation. The evaluators check the unit's performance in readiness, training, management, cost-savings, innovation and other areas.

Winning the award has also shown another side to the soldiers who participated in the FSB win, according to unit officials.

"The soldiers of the Maintenance Division are proud of the honor and recognition bestowed upon them, however, they are seemingly more proud of the real-time impact their high standards of achievement have had on the overall mission at FSB," said Capt. Allen Forte in a written statement on the win.

Master Sergeant Dennis Vandegrift, the non-commissioned officer in charge of the electronic maintenance division was selected to receive the award from the Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics in a Washington D.C. ceremony.

Vandegrift was chosen, according to Forte, because he, ". . . reflects the confident professionalism and can-do attitude found in his soldiers. He points out that the FSB Maintenance Division has set a trend in maintenance excellence that should cause the Department of the Army to relook its standards."

Heidelberg jamboree slated

The 7th Annual U.S. Army Europe Camping Jamboree will be held July 31—Aug. 2 at the Rolling Hills Travel, Camp and Recreation area in Baumholder, according to Dave Marten, recreation specialist with the USAREUR community and family support agency in Heidelberg.

Hosted by the Baumholder military community, the popular three-day event is open to all U.S. forces personnel, DoD employees and their families.

The jamboree will feature a variety of outdoor events and recreation activities such as campfire nights, mountain hikes, swimming golf, tennis, fitness breaks, canoeing, windsurfing, biking, hiking and special programs for kids.

Friday and Saturday evening festivities will be highlighted by a pay-as-you-go barbecue and live country and western music, Marten said.

Camping is free to all participants. Groups of 10 or more people wanting to camp together at the Rolling Hills Travel Camp should notify Steve Bonar, Baumholder outdoor, Outdoor Recreation program director, 485-7182 or 6685, to reserve camping spaces for their groups. Camping for individuals and small groups will be on a first-come, first-served basis.

Travel camp facilities include shower and sanitary facilities, individual and group camping areas, indoor swimming pool, golf course, driving range, tennis courts, children's playground and hiking trails.

People who need camping equipment may want to visit the Outdoor Recreation Center on the Wannsee for equipment checkout.

Painting the tracks of the tanks is one of the final steps in preparing the vehicles for the parade. The soldiers of 40th Armor began readying their tanks in April.

BEHIND THE SHINE

Months of planning, weeks of work: parade season is here

Members of the Allied Staff Berlin started preparing for last Saturday's Allied Forces Day Parade almost as soon as last year's parade was over. The uncounted hours spent preparing for the parade were filled with coordination of soldiers and vehicles and last-minute details that inevitably crop up.

About 2,750 soldiers, eight helicopters and three planes, and many jeeps, armored vehicles and tanks all took part in the parade, and all the work put in by them paid off when they moved proudly down 17 Juni Strasse.

The work of the parade rested on the shoulders of all of the involved elements of the parade. Everything from howitzers to belt buckles had to be cleaned, adjusted and shined, and the necessary precision movements took many hours to perfect.

The battalions began marching practice in May, with morning and afternoon sessions which often added up to five or more hours of marching per day. They practiced such things as column rights, column lefts, eyes right, and even the exact movement of the arm swing. After the day's marching was over, the soldiers were on their own to shine their boots and brass, iron their uniforms, and make sure that the insignia was squared away. The result? About five to nine hours per day spent in preparation for the parade.

The infantry wasn't the only branch to put in some time in preparation though. Beginning May 8 when they returned from Grafenwoehr, West Germany, the vehicles of E Battery, 320th Field Artillery were started on the long road to make sure they were prepared to roll down the parade route and stand tall all the way. They had to be cleaned and repaired from the training in the west, sanded, painted and further prepared for the parade.

Beginning as early as April 1, the tanks of F Company, 40th Armor were being prepared as well. The fenders of the tanks had to be straightened or replaced, they had to be sanded and then painted, and then the many coats of baby oil were applied to add a deep shine. The members of 40th Armor had to paint the tracks before both the dress rehearsal and the actual parade, as well as ensure that they were tight and ready for the route past the Victory Column.

The French elements thundered past crowds first with unpolished dignity. Three companies of AMX 30 tanks came first with two companies of armored personnel carriers following.

British mechanized units were composed of reconnaissance platoons, APCs, anti-tank platoons and Chieftain Tanks.

The U.S. elements were composed of combat vehicles of 4th Battalion including reconnaissance jeeps, anti-tank vehicles, APCs, and M106 heavy mortar carriers. The Combat Support Battalion displayed combat engineer vehicles of the 42nd Engineer Company, M109 A2 self-propelled Howitzers of Battery E. 320th Field Artillery and M60 tanks.

Following a Tripartite Mounted Color Guard, which concluded the parade portion, parachute teams from the 11th Airborne Division and National Parachute Training School team (France) along with the Royal Navy and Royal Marines Parachute team and a Special Forces team gave jump demonstrations.

British forces safety officials estimated the number of spectators at 75,000 for the parade which took place under cloudy skies.

French, British, American and German marching bands heralded the coming of soldiers and armored equipment at Saturday's Allied Forces Day Parade.

The annual June parade is a display of unity among the three allied powers and the Berliners. The parade took place along a half-mile stretch of 17. Juni Strasse and concluded in the shadow of the Victory Column in the British Sector.

Before the parade started, spectators already gathered were treated to trick motorcycle demonstrations by German Polizei and British forces teams. French air force and marine bands also performed in the preliminary activities.

The 12-member U.S. drill team performed in front of the main grandstand shortly before the arrival of military and civilian dignitaries. A Polizei band welcomed British, American and French generals and family members as well as U.S. Minister John Kornblum, Governing Mayor Eberhard Diepgen and other Berlin officials.

Allies march on

A fly over by small airplanes and a variety of helicopters started the parade after a French marine band performed the national anthems of the Allies.

A Tripartite dismounted color guard led the 2,750 foot soldiers, 65 tanks and marching bands along the route. The color guard was made up of a French officer and a platoon from the French 46th Infantry, the British 1st Battalion, the Gloucestershire Regiment and the 6th Battalion, 502nd Infantry.

The French troops were first and led by the 46th Infantry Band.

Then came the British troops of the 1st Battalion. The Scottish soldiers were led by their own band made up of bagpipes and drums. The members of the Gloucestershire Regiment were led by a corps of drums and brass instruments. The members of "The Black Watch" were also led by bagpipes and drums.

Spit-shined infantry

The Berlin Brigade Commander for the U.S. Army, Brig. Gen. Jack Woodall, led the American Forces, followed by the Berlin Brigade Band and members of the 4th Battalion. The 33rd Army Band preceded 5th Battalion soldiers and the 1st Armored Division Band heralded 6th Battalion's coming.

Then came members of the mechanized elements.
